Circuit Court

The first of the two people indicted for the death of Alisha N. Bennett entered a plea in Circuit Court on Thursday of last week. Appearing before Judge Charles Lobban, Lisa Marie Bennett, entered a guilty plea to attempted child neglect resulting in serious bodily injury. This charge is a "lesser and included" offense in Bennett's indictment for child neglect resulting in serious bodily injury. Indictments for child abuse resulting in serious bodily injury and the manufacture of a controlled substance were dismissed as part of a plea bargain with Bennett.

In return for the agreement to allow her to plea to a lesser charge and the two dismissals, Bennett has agreed to testify against Thomas M. Ewing. Ewing was indicted for murder in the death of the child. He also was indicted for child abuse and child neglect. Ewing's trial is now set for September 7.

Alisha Bennett, age 2 1/2, died in August of last year of injuries. Her mother and Ewing were indicted by the Grand Jury in October. The date for Bennett's return to court for a sentencing will be set at a later time.

Cass Escapee, Accomplices have day in Court

by Pam Pritt

A man who allegedly escaped from the work camp at Cass last summer and two of his accomplices were arraigned last week in Pocahontas County Circuit Court.

Billy Joe Hottle appeared before Judge Frank Jolliffe after being indicted by the Grand Jury for escaping from the custody of the Commissioner of Corrections.

The 21-year-old is also charged with three counts of capital kidnapping in Fayette County, two counts of first degree murder in Grant County and one count of first degree murder in Mineral County.

"I'm facing six life withouts," Hottle stated in court last Wednesday, "Can we just get this over with?" Jolliffe continued with the arraignment proceedings.

After a brief session with his court-appointed attorney, Walt Weiford, Hottle pleaded not guilty to the felony charge of escape.

Hottle was returned to the custody of the Commissioner of Corrections. Jolliffe said that the man was not eligible for bond.

After Hottle allegedly escaped, he met up with his cousin, Craig Swick, who had reportedly walked away from a similar facility in Kanawha County.

Although neither man was considered dangerous by authorities at the time of his escape, their subsequent activities provoked a man-hunt that reached as far away as Blacksburg, Virginia.

subsequent activities provoked a man-hunt that reached as far away as Blacksburg, Virginia.

Since the state-wide drama of Hottle and Swick unfolded, citizens of Cass have petitioned the County Commission and the Commissioner of Corrections to close the work camp there, citing fear for public safety.

The County Commission has taken no action; however, County Commission President Norman Alderman said Monday that he would vote to close the work camp.

"Personally, I feel that if the citizens are afraid for their safety, that's the most important thing," Alderman said.

Alderman said that the Commission should proceed with caution, since any vote on the issue could affect future work camps from Denmar.

Hottle was nearing the end of his concurrent sentences for two counts of grand larceny and one count of conspiracy at the time of his escape.

Court room security was tight, as the sheriff, all four deputies, two state police officers and two correctional officers from the state penitentiary guarded the doors during Hottle's arraignment.

Two of Hottle's accused accomplices were arraigned the same day.

Beverly Layton, 21, his girlfriend, entered a plea of not guilty to the felony indictment of aiding the escape of Hottle.

Her court-appointed attorney, James Paul Geary, II, of Grant County, informed the judge that he didn't think the case would appear on the court docket here.

"I don't believe we'll go all the way to trial," Geary stated.

Layton is in custody in Grant County and was transported here by a female deputy sheriff from Randolph County.

Jolliffe placed the woman under $10,000 bond. Following the arraignment, she was transported back to Grant County.

Jay Morgan, 19, was also charged with the felony of aiding the escape of Hottle.

The man waived the right for the case to be presented to the Grand Jury.

His attorney, James Keenan, said that the defendant will stand silent and reserves the right to file pre-trial motions, but does not anticipate doing so.

Jolliffe scheduled a hearing for Morgan in late December and his trial is set for mid-January.

Morgan is free on bond.

County Commission

The County Commission met for a regular meeting on Wednesday of last week.

A group from Durbin told the Commission that they have a community health care facility in progress and requested that the Commission donate $20,000 to the project.

Ruth Bland explained to the Commission that Northern Pocahontas Health Clinic, Inc., a non-profit corporation, has received a grant in excess of $89,000 to hire a doctor and a physician's assistant, but needs the county to supply funds for services.

Mrs. Bland said that Davis Memorial Hospital has agreed to renovate a building in Durbin for the clinic and may even provide specialists there on a rotating basis.

She said that a doctor and a physician's assistant have shown interest in the project, but no contracts have been signed.

She assured the Commissioners that all the corporate papers are in order and that by-laws were adopted.

Mrs. Bland said that the certificate of need should be approved in Charleston by this week.

The Commissioners approved the request for funding and asked that NPHC provide an itemized expenditure plan.

Commissioner Mike Mynuk's motion included the condition that the county's money not be used for renovation of the privately-owned building.

The County Commission accepted the resignation of Linda Simmons as WIC Extension provide a deputy have fallen through. When asked by Mr. Alderman which would be his choice between a field deputy and an office deputy, Mr. Beck said a field deputy.

Mr. Alderman said the Commission has to find a balance between the various needs in the county. He said he feels the $20,000 the Commission has committed to health care in the upper end is more important at this time. Mr. Alderman also told the Sheriff that the people in Durbin will complain if we give you money for pay raises instead of the upper end deputy. However, he did tell Mr. Beck he would help to obtain the upper end deputy, but repeated that he is going to carry out the promise made on health care.

Mr. Mynuk said he feels the Sheriff needs the extra deputy more than the raises.

Mr. Moyers noted that the Commission had spent the carry-over money from the 92-93 budget for "political promises," rather than making up cuts in the 93-94 budget. He wondered where the money is going to come from regardless of which is decided to be more important, raises or additional deputy.

Mr. Alderman noted that the money for the raises could be found by withdrawing funds budgeted for the Health Department and Extension Service.

Mr. Moyers said the Commission has tried to do two things since he has been a member. One is to wean agencies the Commission is not mandated to fund from getting county money.

Mrs. Simmons said that "continued budgetary uncertainties led to her resignation."

Her emotional farewell to the Commission evoked a compliment from County Commissioner Dana Moyers.

"I don't think we'll get anybody as dedicated," the Commissioner said.

Mr. Moyers alone complimented Mrs. Simmons on the job she has done over the past five years.

Commission President Norman Alderman queried Mrs. Simmons as to how Extension plans to provide services for the money that the Commission has already budgeted from Hotel/Motel tax funds. She answered that he would have to take up the matter with County Agent Bob Keller.

Mrs. Simmons covered the 4-H program and Extension Homemakers as her duties for the past five years, as well as administered Dramas, Fairs and Festivals committee funds.

She will take the same position in Greenbrier County December 1.

Sheriff C. C. Beck, Chief Tax Deputy Wilbur Curry and law enforcement deputies Ron Simmons, Troy McCoy and David Walton met with the Commission to discuss a requested pay raise for the employees of the Sheriff's Department. Sheriff Beck has asked the Commission for sufficient funds to give each of his eighteen employees a $50 per month raise in salary. He is also asking for additional help in the Tax Office.

Mr. Beck noted that employees in both the Assessor's office and the County Clerk's office received raises in this fiscal year. He said his staff needs additional money as much as other employees and he will try to get it for them. The need for additional help in the Tax Office salaries equitable between all the offices. He said this has been a failure since the Commission has no power over spending by Court House elected officials once the annual budget is approved. The Commission can't control fairness.

Mr. Alderman noted that the problem of salary equality between officers is a long standing problem that previous commissioners have not been able to solve. He wondered if it may take court action to solve the situation.

The cost of a $50 per month raise for Sheriff Department employees would be $10,800 plus increased costs for benefits that are based on salary.

In another matter involving employees, Sheriff Beck asked if the county has a policy on maternity leave.

Concerning the dog control issue, Mr. Beck suggested that a part-time dog warden be hired on a contract basis and dispatched as needed by the Sheriff's Department. The Commissioners noted that they are already considering this plan.

Mr. Beck reported his department has been invited to join in the State Police microwave radio system. There will be a $2,000 one-time cost for this.

The Sheriff warned the Commission that he has four vehicles with over 100,000 miles on them. They will need replacing in the not too distant future.

The Commission voted unanimously to reject the request from Sheriff Beck for the $50 a month pay increase for his employees. Mr. Moyers pointed out he can't vote for the increase since he doesn't know where the money is coming from.

The maternity leave issue was tabled. It was decided to look at the federal American Leave law for as well as an increased number of committees for incompetent people that the Sheriff's Department is responsible for.

Mr. Alderman pointed out that the Commission cannot dictate how an elected official spends the money in the budget for his/her office once the over-all county budget has been approved. In the case of the Assessor's Office, Mr. Alderman said the law does not allow the Commission to reduce funding for that office.

County Clerk Carmella Combs explained the increase in her office. She said after a long-term employee resigned, her higher pay rate was distributed among the other employees in the office.

A question was raised about the money the law enforcement deputies receive for patrolling national forest land. It was stated in reply that this work is done by the deputies on their own time and their hours are not counted towards determining when the deputies start receiving overtime.

There was a disagreement between the Sheriff and Mr. Mynuk as to whether the increase in salary corrections officers receive after completing training is a pay increase. The Commissioner felt it is a pay raise, while Mr. Beck said it is not a raise, but a change in the base pay that has been the normal agreement of years that correction officer's base pay goes up upon completion of the training.

Mr. Alderman asked the Sheriff if asking for the additional help in the tax office means he has given up on plans for a law enforcement deputy in the upper end? Mr. Beck replied this is not the case. He said plans for the Observatory to help the other topics discussed by Sheriff Beck.

Ramona Goutiere, with the Greenbrier Economic Development Corporation, discussed with the Commission the second round of an economic development grant the GVEDC is making application for. The Commission adopted a resolution giving its support to the grant request.

Ms. Goutiere also discussed with the Commission the need to fund sites within the Greenbrier/Monroe/ Pocahontas area for potential industries that have water and sewer service and are flat. She said she had a business prospect that wanted a site with water, sewage, railroad access and out of the flood plain and was unable to find a suitable location. Ms. Goutiere said companies are getting spoiled by all the "freebies' that many localities are providing.

Sandy Friel and Jay Tibbs discussed with the Commission a state-wide computer system for voter records that is due to be in operation by January 1, 1995.

They also reminded the Commission of the need the County Clerk's office has for more fireproof storage space. The present record room is nearing its capacity. The Commissioners said they are aware of this need, but the first priority for funding at this time has to be meeting the requirements of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act. An elevator will probably have to be built in the Court House to comply with this law.

Ruth Morgan, representing the Historic Landmarks Commission, reviewed for the Commission the effort to have the Court House

Letter

Dear Editor:

This letter is to express my appreciation to the County Commission for their action in removing the Flood Plain Ordinance. Pioneer freedom, common sense and local self-reliance still live, at least in Pocahontas County.

It seemed an interesting coincidence that WVTF radio (89.1 FM) from Roanoke ran a story Friday evening, on FEMA's flood insurance program. It seems that Congress's original intent was to prevent human loss (and perhaps preserve bottom-land) by discouraging building in flood-prone areas. But the opposite has been achieved. Construction in lowlands has increased, and naturally, so has the damage to life and property. (Should we be surprised that God has little respect for stilts, levees and money?) The program, the radio report continued, regularly goes bankrupt and requires to be bailed out with taxpayers billions.

We are well out of it. Norman and Mike, thanks again.

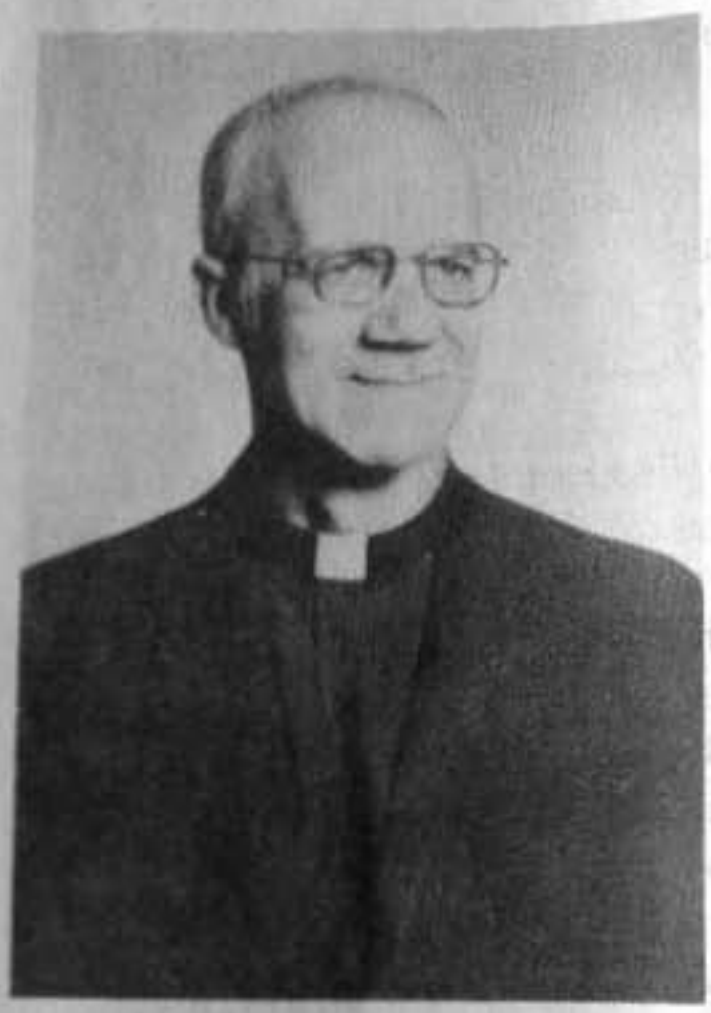
Father Lang to celebrate 40th anniversary of his ordination to priesthood



Divine Word Missionary Father Arnold Lang, pastor of St. John Neumann Parish, Marlinton, will celebrate the 40th anniversary of his ordination to priesthood on July 17.

Father Lang, a native of Cincinnati, formerly ministered at the Good Shepherd Parish, Glenville. Prior to that he spent 31 years as a teacher of biology and religious formation in Divine Word Seminaries located in Girard, Pennsylvania, Washington, D.C., Duxbury, Massachussettes, and Epworth, Iowa. He holds an M.S. degree in biology from Catholic University of America. He has also done pastoral work in Lima, Ohio.

The Society of the Divine Word and the Sister Servants of the Holy Spirit will honor their jubilarians at a Mass of Thanksgiving in the Chapel of the Holy Spirit Convent in this suburb north of Chicago.

The Very Rev. James Bergin, SVD, Provincial of the Chicago Province will preside at the liturgy. A banquet for the jubilarians will follow in the dining room of the Divine Word International Conference Center. Both events are by invitation only for members of the two congregations. Jubilee crosses will be conferred by Provincial Sister Priscilla Burke, SSpS.

The Society of the Divine Word is an international congregation of missionary priests and brothers founded in 1875 by blessed Arnold Janssen in Steyl, Holland. Janssen several years later founded the Sister Servants of the Holy Spirit. Hence, the close relationship between the two congregations and the reason for the joint celebration.

The Society of the Divine Word, more popularly, Divine Word Missionaries has 5,700 priests and brothers serving in 55 countries worldwide including the United States, Canada and the Caribbean.

Durbin Days

Rock Wilson, singer-songwriter, will appear in concert on Saturday, July 17, at the 6th Annual Durbin Days at 11 a.m.

Rock Wilson began his singing career in the early 1980's when he began singing and emceeing at various pageants throughout West Virginia and Ohio. Following this, Rock expanded to solo shows at various fairs and festivals. In 1987, Rock began his recording career by releasing his first album entitled "Home Sweet Home". The album sold nearly 500 copies in its first week, strictly on a local market.

That same year, Rock joined "Roadwork," a long-standing, reputable band out of Parkersburg. As the new lead singer, Rock focused mostly on fairs and festivals and private engagements. Rock stayed with this band for nearly two years before leaving to start his own band, "Wanted". Rock is also well known for his high-energy and entertaining solo shows.

Rock and his new band have performed many openings for national acts including B. J. Thomas, The Mommas and Poppas, T. Graham Brown, the Bellamy Brothers and Lionel Cartwright. Rock performs solo as well as with his band at many fairs and festivals throughout the summer months.

In addition to his singing career, Rock is a recent graduate of Law at West Virignia University, where he was selected as the West Virginia University Mountaineer Mascot. Rock will be returning to school this fall to complete his masters degree and will once again perform the duties of the Mountaineer. Rock is the first three-time Mountaineer since the very first WVU Mountaineer in 1930. In December of 1991, Rock became the first Mountaineer ever to sing the national anthem in uniform at an organized sports event. Since becoming the Mountaineer, Rock's popularity as an entertainer has dramatically increased.

County Commission

The County Commission met for a regular meeting on Tuesday.

The major action of the day was to vote to eliminate the county's Flood Plain Ordinance. The motion was made by Commission President Norman Alderman, a long-time opponent of the ordinance. A little over two years ago the ordinance was approved by the Commission on a 2-1 vote with Mr. Alderman in the minority. The approval came after several years of controversy and a political change on the Commission in the 1990 election. The 1992 election brought another change on the Commission on this issue as new Commissioner Mike Mynuk joined Mr. Alderman in the 2-1 vote to eliminate the ordinance. Dana Moyers cast the no vote against the motion.

The flood plain ordinance is a requirement before property owners can obtain policies under the federally sponsored flood insurance program. According to officials from the Federal Emergency Management Agency the ordinance is also required if the county is to again receive the federal aid that came after the 1985 flood. Property owners within the town limits of Marlinton and Durbin are not affected by the Commission's action on Tuesday as each has its own flood plain ordinance.

The ordinance required property owners in the flood plain along the river and its tributory streams to place new construction above the 100 year flood level and restricted development in the portion of the flood plain known as the floodway. The ordinance included a permit system to ensure property owners would carry out the requirements of the law.

In making his motion to eliminate the ordinance, Mr.

need for additional help in the Circuit Clerk's office and perhaps also an assistant prosecuting attorney. The Circuit Clerk will also need additional space.

Melanie Shafer, owner of the River Place restaurant, met with the Commission concerning the advertisement in the paper seeking bids for food service at the jail. She said the ad said there would be information on the menu requirements at the County Clerk's office but there is none. County Clerk Carmella Combs said she has not yet received the information from the Sheriff's Department. Ms. Shafer, who now has the contract, asked why bids are being sought. She was told that it has nothing to do with the quality of the food but ways bids were sought when she got the contract and cost. At that time there was no public advertisement seeking bids. The Commission is also concerned about the Sheriff staying in the budgeted amount for food.

Several people appeared before the Commission with a need for additional financial support of the agency they represented.

Richard Zimmerman, from the West Virginia University Extension Service, discussed the future of the county's Extension Office with the Commission. He said the office is in danger of being closed with lack of secretarial support being the primary concern. Mr. Zimmerman said each county receives one agent with salary and benefits paid by WVU. The county is expected to provide an office, secretary, telephone, travel expenses, and office supplies.

Mr. Zimmerman explained that the primary assignment of the agent is determined by the county extension committee. Historically

The ordinance included a permit system to ensure property owners would carry out the requirements of the law.

In making his motion to eliminate the ordinance, Mr. Alderman repeated his reasons for opposing it. He said he feels it is a zoning ordinance and, therefore, was not properly enacted since the procedures for passing zoning ordinances were not followed. Mr. Alderman also said he was acting on principle as he is against restrictions on the right of property owners in how they use their land.

Mr. Moyers stated that he wants it to be clear who is responsible for the elimination of the ordinance and whatever impact this action may have on the county.

Circuit Judge Frank Jolliffe and Probation Officer Fred Taylor met with the Commission to discuss office space at the Court House for the probation officers. Judge Jolliffe reviewed a new law that requires counties to provide office space for the probation officers. There must be an office for a secretary and one for the officers. The office must be located so as not to call particular attention to those people meeting with the probation officers. This has become more important since juvenile probation services have been moved from the Department of Human Services to the Circuit Courts.

The Commission first discussed the need for this office space several meetings ago and hoped to be able to utilize space at the jail that Service, discussed the future of the county's Extension Office with the Commission. He said the office is in danger of being closed with lack of secretarial support being the primary concern. Mr. Zimmerman said each county receives one agent with salary and benefits paid by WVU. The county is expected to provide an office, secretary, telephone, travel expenses, and office supplies.

Mr. Zimmerman explained that the primary assignment of the agent is determined by the county extension committee. Historically agriculture has been the first priority in most counties for the first agent. Under certain conditions a county can have a second and third agent but must provide a salary match for these people.

With the reduction in funds from the Commission for 93-94 (and Board of Education) the county extension no longer has a full-term secretary and full salary match for the second agent position. Mr. Zimmerman said the salary will be covered this year but he can't expect even one agent to work with a secretary 1 or 1 1/2 days a week. He said it has been tried and doesn't work. He said the office may be non-existent next year and this was no bluff or threat but just stating a fact. The Commission's allocation for the Extension Office has gone from over $30,000 in 1991-92 to $13,400 this year.

Ed Riley, representing the Health Department, reviewed the financial situation of his agency. He said the Department needs about $20,000 to be able to maintain the same level of service and asked the Commission to appropriate $15,000 from funds carried over for the 92-93 fiscal year.

Mr. Riley also said the taking of two rooms for the probation office will create problems. The to call particular attention to those people meeting with the probation officers. This has become more important since juvenile probation services have been moved from the Department of Human Services to the Circuit Courts.

The Commission first discussed the need for this office space several meetings ago and hoped to be able to utilize space at the jail that is not presently being used. This was not possible since juveniles cannot be at the jail. A second possibility, the room in the Prosecuting Attorney's office formerly used by the Assistant Prosecutor, has also been ruled out because of a lack of privacy.

Judge Jolliffe, Mr. Taylor and the Commissioners went to look at other locations in the Court House. The Magistrate Clerk's office was eliminated because it is only one room. It was decided that two of the rooms now being used by the Health Department would be suitable and is the only space available, although it is recognized that this will cause a problem for the Health Department. The two rooms are part of four rooms now being used to hold clinics.

The Commission approved the use of the two rooms for the probation officers.

Judge Jolliffe also discusused with the Commission the iompact the new prison at Denmar will have on the workload in the Pocahontas Circuit Court. All legal matters, criminal and civil, involving the inmates will come through this county's court. This will create the

Mr. Riley also said the taking of two rooms for the probation office will create problems. The Commissioners said they are aware of this and will try to find other space for the Health Department to use.

Allen Johnson, President of the Pocahontas Free Library Board, reported on the Board's annual meeting and budget for 1993-94. He said the budget estimates revenue will run about $20,000 short of expenses. Mr. Johnson stated that the Library system operates very frugally with employees barely above minimum wage limits. He said the Board does have the McClintic Estate money but would prefer to use this fund for capital improvements rather than for operating expenses. He asked the Commission to consider a contribution to the library from carry-over funds.

Gibbs Kinderman, speaking on behalf of the Emergency Medical Services Board, asked for funds to finish giving hepatitis B shots for emergency workers.

The Commission assured all those asking for funds that their requests will be considered. However, they warned that the carry-over is not expected to be very large.

Meeting on Denmar Prison Project

A number of state officials met last week with citizens from the Hillsboro area to provide information and answer questions on the proposed prison at Denmar. The meeting was held at the Hillsboro school gym on Wednesday.

The first speaker was Department of Corrections Commissioner Nicholas Hun. Mr. Hun said this meeting would be the first of a series of public meetings to keep citizens informed on the progress of the project. Also a Citizens Advisory Council will be formed to provide public input into the operation of the prison. Mr. Hun stressed that the Denmar Correctional Facility wants to be a good neighbor.

Mr. Hun told the group that the Regional Jail Authority has approved Denmar as a prison. This step was necessary before the project could officially get underway. He also expressed confidence that the $500,000 needed for the renovation of the Denmar facility will be located. An article in Wednesday's Charleston Gazette reported possible problems in obtaining the money due to a legal challenge to bonds being issued by the State School Building Authority. An adverse decision on the school bonds could also put bonds issued by the Jail Authority in legal limbo. The Denmar renovation money is to come from the sale of these bonds. Mr. Hun said it is hoped to obtain the money from the Jail Development Fund. (The Legislature included in the 1993-94 state budget money to former state employee will not have to take the test before applying for a job at Denmar.

Kathy Lucas, with the Corrections Training Division, said that anyone employed as a corrections officer will have to take seven weeks of training. Most of this will be at the Corrections Academy located at West Liberty State College although the last part may be done at Denmar. She said this training is a condition of employment for correction officers.

A number of questions were asked by the people at the meeting and answered by Mr. Hun and Mr. Yardley.

Several involved the type of inmates that would be housed at Denmar. It was explained that prisoners are given a 1 through 5 rating with 5 being maximum security and 1 low risk. It was stressed that Denmar will never knowingly receive 4 and 5 rated inmates. The two men pointed out that the cost of converting Denmar into a maximum security facility would be prohibitive due to its original construction as a hospital. There will be a fence around the main building and while there are no guarantees, the Corrections Department hopes to err on the side of public safety with the inmates. The new maximum security facility in Fayette County is scheduled to open next year and should be more than sufficient to handle that classification of inmate.

The mix of races in the state's prison population is 80% white, 19% black, and 1% other groups. It is expected the ratio at Denmar to be in obtaining the money due to a legal challenge to bonds being issued by the State School Building Authority. An adverse decision on the school bonds could also put bonds issued by the Jail Authority in legal limbo. The Denmar renovation money is to come from the sale of these bonds. Mr. Hun said it is hoped to obtain the money from the Jail Development Fund. (The Legislature included in the 1993-94 state budget money to operate the new prison but not renovation money).

Mr. Hun then said the Denmar prison is scheduled to be opened by November 1, with 150 to 200 inmates brought from the Huttonsville Correctional Center. He said they would be low and medium risk prisoners. Mr. Hun assured the group of the safety of this category of inmates. Programs at Denmar for the inmates will include those of an educational nature as well as some prison industries and agriculture.

A youthful offender boot camp program will be started within a year and a half, Mr. Hun told the group. Another program at Denmar will be a drug rehabilitation program for inmates nearing the end of their terms.

The next speaker was Steve Yardley who has been appointed as warden of the new correctional facility. Mr. Yardley said he was excited about his new position and looking forward to getting the facility open. He said he would be living in the community. A Marine Corps veteran, Mr. Yardley has been with the Department of Corrections for twenty years. He has been Associate Warden in charge of security at Huttonsville for the past 14 1/2 years.

Mr. Yardley said planning has come a long way for the new prison. The renovation work will main building and while there are no guarantees, the Corrections Department hopes to err on the side of public safety with the inmates. The new maximum security facility in Fayette County is scheduled to open next year and should be more than sufficient to handle that classification of inmate.

The mix of races in the state's prison population is 80% white, 19% black, and 1% other groups. It is expected the ratio at Denmar to be similar.

A question was asked about a rumor that the Anthony Center might be moved to Denmar. The answer was that there are no immediate plans to move Anthony. However, it was noted that the institution is presently located in a federally-owned facility that is in bad shape. For the next two years the institution will remain where it is but could be moved after that. There are 100 inmates and 65 staff members at Anthony.

As to the maximum number of prisoners that might be at Denmar, the answer was 200-220 in the main building, 30 in the drug unit, no more than 100 in the boot camp (but more likely 40 to 50) and 100 from Anthony if it moves. Mr. Hun said, however, he does not anticipate Denmar growing beyond 350 even if Anthony is moved to the site. It was stated that there will not be a need for more land.

A question was asked if Denmar inmates will be on work-release in the area. The response was that inmates from Huttonsville presently come into the county to provide labor for various projects and this will continue with the Denmar facility. Mr. Yardley noted inmates can be used for community service projects only. He said the prison will take requests for inmate labor and review to see if the project is suitable.

Mr. Yardley said planning has come a long way for the new prison. The renovation work will be done by a combination of inmate labor and outside contractors. Mr. Hun said in his remark that the contractors will be encouraged to hire local people.

According to Mr. Yardley the facility will have 56 employees when it opens. This will include 35 correctional officers, administrative personnel, food service and maintenance, case managers, and correctional counselors. Additional staff will provide the educational and medical services, both of which will be done on a contract basis. The State Department of Education handles education programs for the prison system and has contracted with Greenbrier Community College for Denmar services.

Mr. Yardley noted that in addition to the economic boost to the area from the facility and its staff, there will be an economic input from the visits by families of inmates.

Max Farley, with Division of Personnel, said he needed to find out the interest in employment at Denmar to know if local testing should be scheduled. He said anyone who has taken the civil service test in the past year or is a

A question was raised about the road through the Denmar property that gives access to the river. Mr. Hun said they would not interfere with public access. He said they may talk to the Division of Highways about relocating the road.

Also attending the meeting were Deborah Huck, from the Commissioner's office, and William Duncil, Warden at Huttonsville. Information was available on employment opportunities at the new prison.

LOGGING CERTIFICATION

According to Bill Maxey, Director of the West Virginia Division of Forestry, the logger certification provision of the Logging Sediment Control Act became effective July 1, 1993, and requires any individual supervising a timbering operation to be certified.

In order to meet the requirements, an individual must complete training and be certified in first aid, Best Management Practices (BMP's) for silviculture, and safe conduct of timbering operations. Once a logger meets these demands and becomes certified, he or she is issued a certificate and a photo identification card. Although retraining is necessary only every three years, certification renewal must be done by July 1 of each year.

Mr. Kinderman reported that three terms on the Development Authority expired last week. He said Mike Murphy and Dick Burns wish to remain on the Authority. They were re-appointed. Moffett McNeel has indicated he does not wish to continue on the Authority and his seat is vacant.

Harry McIlvaine, with the West Virginia Forestry Association, described for the Commission a tour being planned for federal and state officials in the county to show the importance of the lumber industry to Pocahontas and other counties and, in turn, the importance of timber from Forest Service land to the industry. In recent years timber sales by the Service have been held up by environmental appeals. The tour is being planned for August. Timber licenses are renewed on an annual basis and expire June 30 of each year. Other requirements of the logging sediment control law provide that timbering companies must notify the Division within three days of starting a logging operation. They are also required to post a notice at the active landing of the logging operation displaying the name of the company and the license number in letters at least three inches high.

The penalties for not complying with the law in licensing, notification, posting or logger certification can include suspension of an operation and/or civil

Letter

Dear Editor,

I would like to address the issue of the strike which is presently taking place at Howes Leather Company in Frank. First and foremost, the views expressed in this letter are solely mine, not those of the workers or the union.

To begin, let me state that I am thankful that Howes Leather is located within our community. It has been and hopefully will continue to be part of the economic foundation of Pocahontas County. However, this does not annul the constitutional freedom guaranteed to every US citizen. Included in these are the freedom of speech and the freedom of assembly. The workers at Howes Leather are utilizing their constitutional rights to make known their grievances. These grievances are grounded in the following: the workers want 1 - their health care package left intact; 2 - a raise adequate enough to counterbalance the increase in the cost of living. Even in our rural area, we too have been affected by these rising costs. The present raise offered by Howes Leather Company is an insult to the honest, hard working laborers who have made the financial working of this made the financial working of this company a profitable one for years.

To address the issue of health care, I realize that times are hard for not only the workers and their families but for companies as well. The explanation to justify the cut in health coverage does not qualify. In my opinion, if a survey were done at Howes to identify the illnesses and injuries treated and covered by insurance, I feel certain the results would show a high percentage of these are work related due to the work environment. I acknowledge that the workers were aware of this environment when hired and that it hasn't changed. But they were also aware of the benefit package (include in this, health care) which offset the working environment.

In conclusion, I want to express my deepest, most sincere thanks to the many businesses who have supported the strike from the beginning and continue to do so. It is people like you who are willing to stand up for the rights of citizens through good times and bad that make our nation one of the greatest in the world. To the few businesses who have not supported this strike, it is your constitutional right to do so. However, let me say this. I supported the strike from the beginning and continue to do so. It is people like you who are willing to stand up for the rights of citizens through good times and bad that make our nation one of the greatest in the world. To the few businesses who have not supported this strike, it is your constitutional right to do so. However, let me say this. I realize this strike is affecting not only the workers and their families but your business also. I apologize for this, but I do not apologize for the fact that the workers are standing up for their rights and the future of their families. Keep in mind that as a local business, you have been supported by the hard earned money of these laborers. The decision to strike was not an action carelessly taken; it was discussed, evaluated for the long term effects, and voted on.

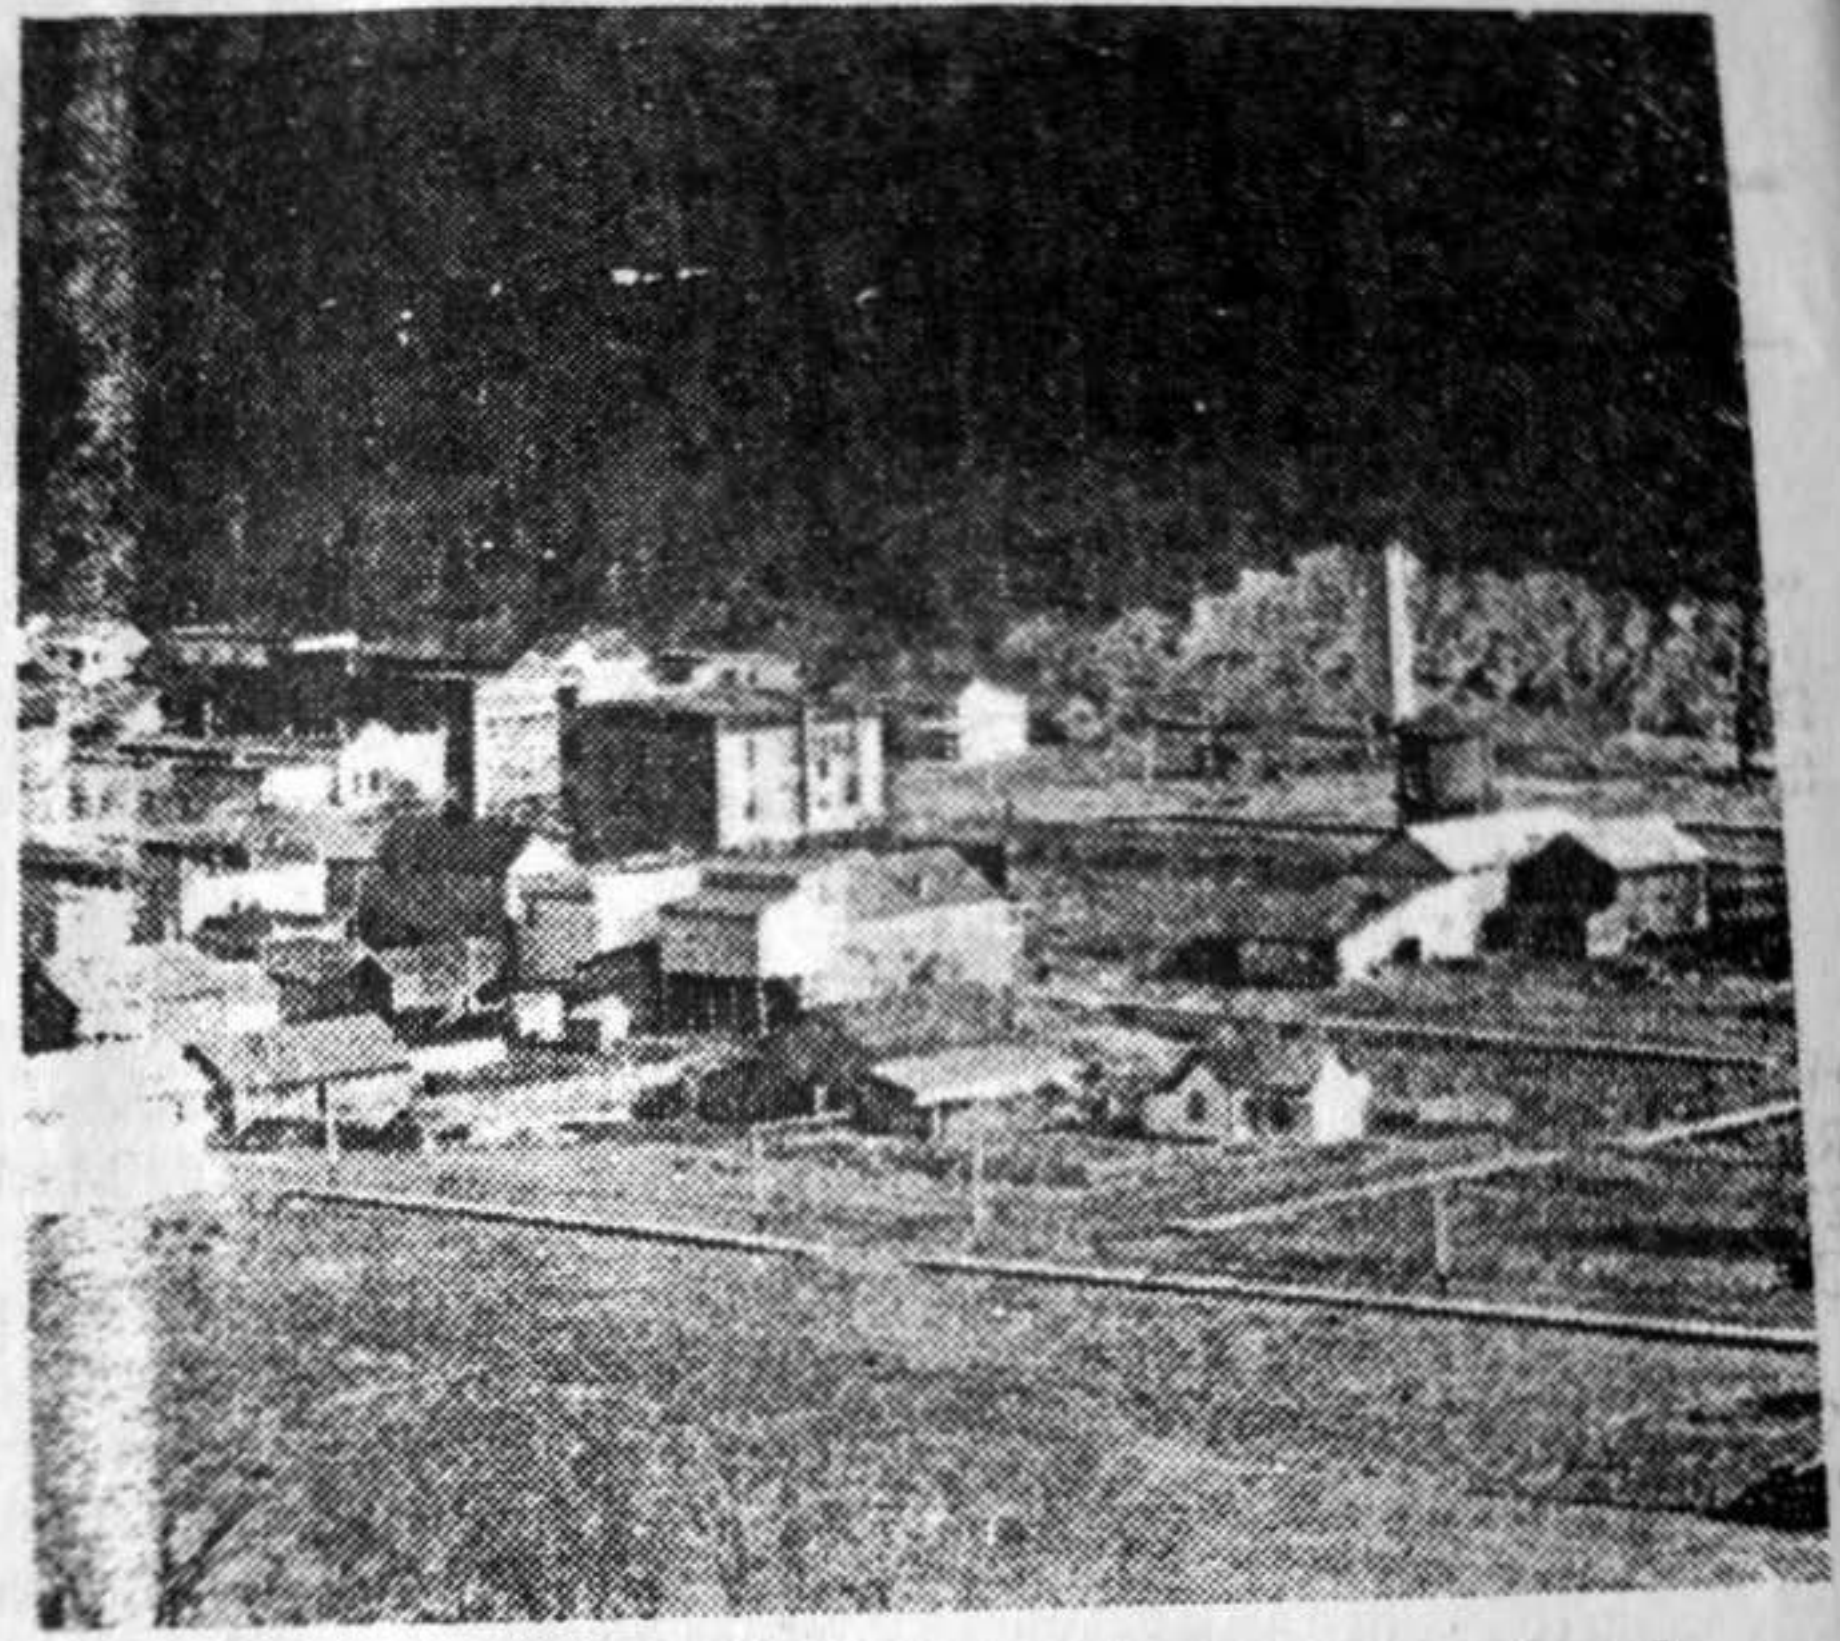
The old saying goes something like this, "Walk a mile in my shoes before you judge me!"

Sincerely,
Cheryl Nelson,



This photo is blown-up from a postcard view of Marlinton about 1909. The first opera house building is in the center, the two story structure with a second level addition on the back. The existing First National Bank and Richardson Store buildings are to the upper left of the opera house. The fire hose drying tower and first railroad water tank can also be seen.

structure with a second level addition on the back. The existing First National Bank and Richardson Store buildings are to the upper left of the opera house. The fire hose drying tower and first railroad water tank can also be seen.

MARLINTON'S OPERA HOUSES

The plural of houses in the headline for this article is emphasized because research in the past two weeks has come up with the information that Marlinton had two opera houses, not one. One, of course, is the existing building on Third Avenue that is featured on this year's Pioneer Day badge. It, however, is the second such facility in Marlinton. The first opera house was located on the lot adjacent to the present building, now the parking lot for the Marlinton Electric Company.

J. A. Tilton was the builder of both facilities. In January of 1907 he purchased Lot 13 of Block 34 in Marlinton (now the parking lot) from W. R. Gourley, who had acquired it from the Pocahontas Development Company the year before. It is not known if Mr. Gourley built anything on the lot.

Both The Pocahontas Times and the Marlinton Messenger reported to their readers in early August 1907 that Mr. Tilton had his opera house under construction. Associated with Mr. Tilton in the project was Dwight Alexander. Mr. Alexander is referred to as the Manager of the facility in newspaper articles following its completion. The building was in use in September and given the name "The Grand" in news stories and advertisements.

According to an article in the Manufacturing Company, of North Tonawanda, New York, for the purchase of a second hand Band Organ with 18 selections of music. The cost was $700, to be paid with $100 on delivery and $30 per month thereafter.

In addition to the opera house, Mr. Tilton got into the newspaper business in October 1911 when he purchased the Marlinton Messenger. In January 1912 the paper's office was moved to the Opera House.

In June 1913 Mr. Tilton was party to another deed of trust, this time to secure a loan of $1900. This deed put up as security the three lots and the two buildings, barber shop equipment and furnishings in the old opera house, the band organ and newspaper equipment in the new opera house, and some other land owned by Mr. Tilton. The source of the loan is not clear from the deed.

By the next year Mr. Tilton was in financial trouble of some sort as the holders of the three deeds of trust foreclosed and put the property up for sale. Whether it was the opera house, the newspaper, or both that was the cause of Mr. Tilton's money woes is not known. The newspaper, now known as The Republican News, ceased publication in February 1914.

In March the lots and two newspaper articles following its completion. The building was in use in September and given the name "The Grand" in news stories and advertisements.

According to an article in the Messenger, the building could accommodate 250 people in the "dress circle" and 100 in the "gallery". As perhaps can be seen from the poor but only photo located for this building, it was a two story structure with an interesting addition on the rear at the upper level. In addition to vaudeville acts and dramatic productions, moving picture shows were also advertised.

The business at The Grand must have been good because the following article in the Times in January 1910 tells of plans for a larger facility.

"J. G. Tilton and associates have purchased lots adjoining the present Opera House building and are getting lumber on the ground for a large amphitheatre to be erected in the early spring. The plans contemplate a building 60 x 116 feet with stage in the rear and a heating and electric light plant adjoining of sufficient magnitude to supply this and other buildings in the heart of town. The building will be pushed to completion as soon as the spring season opens. They have received plans and specifications for the electric light and heating plant and will install same as soon as the building is completed. Mr. Tilton on his recent trip North inspected several equipments of this kind and he and his associates expect to have their building open by July 1st. The building will be modern in all respects and handsomely equipped. The present opera house is so constructed that it can easily be converted into flats and living rooms."

The identity of the "associates" cause of Mr. Tilton's money woes is not known. The newspaper, now known as The Republican News, ceased publication in February 1914.

In March the lots and two buildings were sold under the deeds of trust held by the bank. The barber shop outfit, newspaper equipment, organ and opera house furnishings were sold in July. L. S. Cochran was the purchaser at both sales.

On December 30, 1915, the original opera house building was badly damaged in a fire that also destroyed two adjacent buildings. It was rebuilt as a one-story structure.

In October 1916, Mr. Cochran deeded all three lots and the buildings to Floyd Dilley. Mr. Dilley transferred the property in August 1920 to his sister, Veva Tilton (Mrs. J. G.).

In June 1946 the property was split when Mrs. Tilton sold Lot 13 (the original opera house) to Williams & Pifer Lumber Company. From Williams & Pifer the lot went to Carl Weber in January 1952. Following Weber as owner was W. M. Waugh and Ben Waugh by deed in December 1955. Carl Underwood acquired the property in December 1963 and he sold it to Marlinton Electric Company in July 1969. Marlinton Electric tore the building down to create the parking lot.

Over the years the businesses known to have been in the original opera house building have been a barber shop, tire supply store, appliance store, tire recapping business, and a taxi stand.

The second opera house property remained in Tilton ownership until sold by Curtis and Charles Tilton to Glade and Maxine Fertig in December 1977. In 1981 they transferred the building to

The identity of the "associates" mentioned in the article is not known.

Mr. Tilton purchased the two lots, Nos. 14 & 15, needed for the new building from the Pocahontas Development Company in September and December of 1909.

In March 1910, the Times reported to its readers that Mr. Tilton had broken ground for the bigger opera house, to be built of concrete. Andrew Moore and Gum Johnson had the contract for the concrete.

Completion date for the building has not yet been determined but it was in use by the end of the year.

During the construction Mr. Tilton received two loans from the Bank of Marlinton, one for $2000 and the other for $1000. Both were secured by deeds of trust on Lots 13, 14, and 15.

In August 1912, Mr. Tilton made an agreement with the Niagara Musical Instrument malicious wounding and two charges of battery. Hysell was placed in jail in lieu of $3000 bond.

Waugh by deed [illegible] Carl Underwood acquired the property in December 1963 and he sold it to Marlinton Electric Company in July 1969. Marlinton Electric tore the building down to create the parking lot.

Over the years the businesses known to have been in the original opera house building have been a barber shop, tire supply store, appliance store, tire recapping business, and a taxi stand.

The second opera house property remained in Tilton ownership until sold by Curtis and Charles Tilton to Glade and Maxine Fertig in December 1977. In 1981 they transferred the building to Glade's Building Supply Company. Ten years later the property was acquired by the Landmarks Commission for preservation and restoration.

In addition to a facility for shows and movies, Mr. Tilton had roller skating in the second opera house soon after its completion. It was also used for athletic events. (See History of Pocahontas County, 1981 for information on some of the activities in the building in early years. There is one mistake in this article - there was no school fire in 1918, but school activities were held in the building.)

The longest continuous use of the building, however, was as an auto dealership, Pifer Motor Company. This was followed by its final use as a warehouse before being acquired by the Landmarks Commission.

J. G. Tilton moved to Charleston not long after losing the opera house properties. He died there on April 21, 1945. His wife, the former Mary Eveva Dilley, lived until April 7, 1973.

New Hope Lutheran Church to celebrate its building's centennial next weekend

The congregation of New Hope Lutheran Church, Minnehaha Springs, will celebrate the centennial of its church building Saturday, July 10, and Sunday, July 11. New Hope invites friends of the church, former members and the community to celebrate these events.

On Saturday evening at 6:00 p. m., the congregation will host a chicken barbecue, an ice-cream social, a campfire and hymn sing.

Sunday's worship service, which will begin at 10:00 a.m., will be followed by a picnic lunch and a celebration of the church's history beginning at 2:00 p.m. The afternoon events will include an anniversary picture, former pastors' memories and the opening of the cornerstone.

The congregation of New Hope Lutheran Church was formed in 1876 when Henry White brought his family to Minnehaha Springs. The cornerstone of the church was laid on July 9, 1893 by the Rev. J. F. A. Lautenschlager, who gave the first sermon in the present church building. This church, the only Lutheran church in Pocahontas County, has been in continuous use ever since.

Part of a three-church parish, New Hope is linked with Faith Lutheran Church, Franklin, and Mt. Hope Lutheran Church, Upper Tract. Its present pastor is the Rev. Neal G. Weltzin.

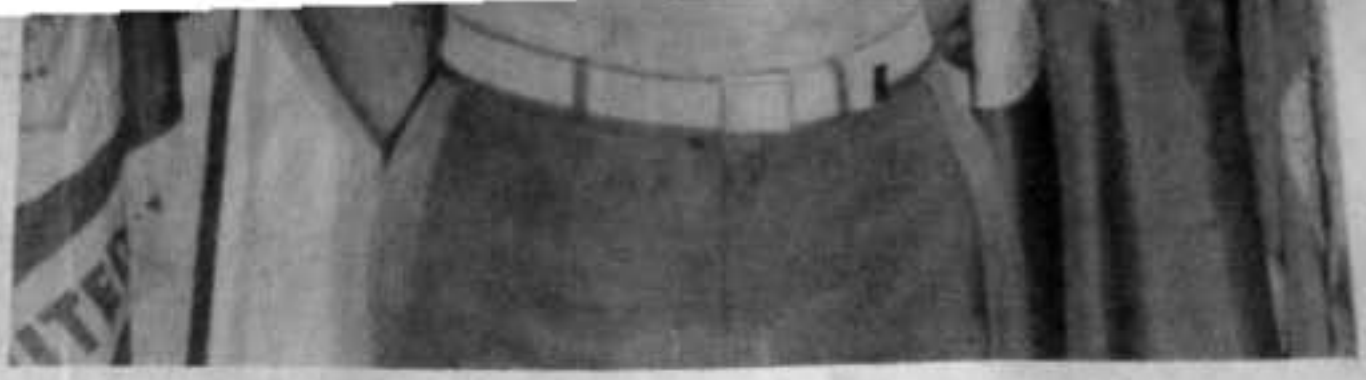
Capt. Jonese named Officer of the Year



Capt. Jonese named Officer of the Year

Also receives Joint Service Commendation Medal

Captain David R. Jonese, USMC, has been selected as the Defense Information Systems Agency's (DISA) Officer of the Year. DISA is the Department of Defense's Worldwide agency responsible for DOD's immense information systems network.

Captain Jonese is stationed at Ft. Huachuca, Sierra Vista, Arizona, at JITC. The Joint Interoperability Test Center is a branch of DISA responsible for testing communication systems and equipment. As the senior officer in the Joint Facility Testbed he is charged with integrating personnel and equipment testbed assets to ensure that ongoing tests are adequately planned and executed. Testbed assets include equipment and facilities in excess of $60 million on a 40 acre compound.

Jonese's responsibilities include managment of hazardous materials, training and safety. His supervisor, Lt. Col. Bob Carr summed up his character as follows, "Capt. Jonese is known as the 'go to' officer within JITC. He is not afraid to solve testing coordination issues head-on without delay, reflecting a maturity and confidence that belies his company grade level."

Proper planning and coordination of tests at JITC requires an individual in charge who can harmonize the efforts of government engineers, contractors, and military personel working together. "Capt. Jonese has a complete grasp of his responsibilities and is able to effectively organize and direct subordinates, primarily because they respect his personal capacity, leadership abilities, and integrity. He is well known for his ability to work varied, simultaneous tasks against timelines," Carr said in praising Jonese.

Jonese was raised in Arbovale and enlisted in the Marine Corps after receiving an associate's degree in Occupational Safety and Health. He spent three years in the Marine Corps as an Avionics Technician. Graduating from Southern Illinois University while on active duty with a Bachelor of Science in Electronics Management, he was then selected for the Enlisted Commissioning Program and was commissioned as a 2nd Lt. in December of 1987. He was then assigned to MCAS Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii, as an Airframe Officer.

Jonese is married to the former Cheryl Dunbrack, of Marlinton, and has two children, Kachine and Lakota. He is the son of Joe and June Jonese, of Arbovale.

The DISA Officer of the Year award was presented to Captain Jonese at a ceremony in Washington, D.C. by General Alonzo Short, Commanding General, DISA. He also received a Joint Service Commendation Medal.

DEATH

Louise McNeill Pease

Louise McNeill Pease, 82, died Wednesday, June 16, 1993, at Good Living, a retirement community in Malden, where she had made her home for several years.

The daughter of the late G. D. and Grace (McNeill) McNeill, she was born at Buckeye January 9, 1911.

In 1939 she married Roger W. Pease, who died September 24, 1990.

Her husband, her parents, a sister, Elizabeth Dorsey, and a brother, Ward McNeill, preceded her in death.

Surviving her are a son, Douglas McNeill Pease, of South Windsor, Connecticut; a granddaughter, Noralyn M. Pease; and a brother, James W. McNeill, of Buckeye.

Services were held Sunday on the lawn of Cabin Creek Quilts in Malden and then on Monday at 11 a. m. in VanReenen Funeral Home by the Rev. Roy Gwinn. Burial was on the McNeill Farm at Buckeye.

Mrs. Pease was Poet Laureate of West Virginia, named in 1977 by then-Governor Jay Rockefeller. She started writing poetry when she was 16 and had poems published in many national magazines. She was the author of several books, Mountain White (1931), Gauley Mountain, Time is Our House, Paradox Hill, Elderberry Flood, The Milkweed Ladies (her memoirs), Hill Daughter: New and Selected Poems (1991), and many magazine articles.

Just before her death she completed her last book. Her son came to see her, typed the last chapter, put it in the mail to the publishers, and then she seemed to let go of life, according to the family.

Arrow Grasses by Greenbrier River

Arrow grasses by the river,
Phalanx, spear by spear arrayed,
Teach us that we may remember
Others here have walked afraid.

Teach us—all our generation—
We are not the first to know
Death and war and red transgression
Where these quiet waters flow.

Long ago our father's father
Here in springtime dropped his corn,
Died and fell, an arrow winging
In his heart that April morn—

Dead as you and I will ever
Lie beneath the atom's burst—
Arrow grasses by the river,
Teach us we are not the first,

Nor the last to live in danger,
Live in wonder and in woe,
Here on earth beside the river,
Where the quiet waters flow.

Fox and Geese

Let us make a circle here—
Round and round we go
Till our feet have made this ring
Beaten in the snow.

Let us cross it now with paths—
Crisscross passing by,
Back and forth, until our trails
Cut it like a pie.

Let us play at Fox and Geese,
Run and chase and sing,
Play the world is still at peace,
And our world a ring
Made by children in the snow of this meadow long ago,
Children of the sun and snow—
Children of the sun.

The Dream

I tried to move,
But I could make no motion;
I tried to scream,
But all my screams were gone;
I tried to see,
But fog was lapped around me—
I lay upon my face, yet saw my spine,
And every bone there seemed to shine—
My country's bones?
Or were they mine?

Each vertebra a coin of gold
Set deeply in my flesh and skin—
Set deeply there and hammered in Until because of gold—its love—
I could not move—
I tried to move—

Memoria

I have never heard them;
I shall never hear—
Still an echo falling
When the night is clear,
In the darkness wakes me
Like a trumpet's call:
Wild swans crying
Southward in the fall.

Joann Estep quilts for Prevention 2000, meets with Governor in Charleston

Joann Estep, of Marlinton, is pictured with Governor Gaston Caperton during the public signing of Senate Bill 14 at the State Capitol on May 10, 1993. The bill, which goes into effect July 1, 1993, prohibits anyone under the age of 21 from purchasing, possessing or consuming alcohol. Since studies have shown that the later in life a person starts to drink the less likely he/she to become an alcoholic, this bill helps our youth to postpone the use of alcohol.

Joann made the quilt for the 1992 WV Unified: Prevention 2000 Conference. This was a statewide event which covered many prevention techniques thus enabling the prevention movement to continue foward in the State.

Accompanying Joann for the signing were her mother, Orpha Vance, of Marlinton, her daughter, Jessica Estep, of Marlinton, and her sister, Zona Swann, of Huntington.

Project Prom presented May 7 at PCHS

On Friday May 7, Deputy Sheriff Craig Doss presented a program to Pocahontas County High School Juniors and Seniors on the effects of drinking and driving and the legal consequences of being arrested for drinking and driving. Mr. Kenneth Vance, PCHS school principal, encouraged students to have a good, safe prom and not participate in drinking and driving.

Betty Burke, Drug-Free Communities Coordinator, and Linda Simmons, WVU Extension Agent, were present to distribute t-shirts with an anti-drug slogan. Drugs are Cool-Not! The t-shirt was designd by Deer Creek Defnders 4-H member Mary Ann Carter. Mary Ann helped present a t-shirt to all present.

Betty Burke also worked with Karen Friel in funding $500 to Project Prom. These funds were used for public awareness and educational materials.

Birthdays

Pearl Ward was 94 on her birthday on June 14.

Ellett Higgins was 90 on June 12 at Pocahontas Continuous Care Center.

Mrs. Dewie Nelson
Celebrates 96th Birthday

Mrs. Dewie G. Nelson, of Cass, celebrated her 96th birthday. Mrs. Nelson was born May 26, 1897, in Horton, West Virginia, the daughter of the late Frank and Flora Slayton.

Mrs. Nelson is the widow of the late Walter C. Nelson and the mother of twelve children (three deceased) twenty-two grandchildren, thirty-two great-grandchildren, and four great-great-grandchildren.

A dinner in her honor was served at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Dollie and Hubert Lewis, with whom she makes her home. Members of the family attending were Phil and Hazel Nelson, of Newark, Ohio, Barbara and Kevin Burris, Dawn and Ashley Robertson, of Aiken, South Carolina, Teal and Ann Nelson, of Charleston, South Carolina, Charles and Betty Haislop, of Baltimore, Maryland, Bob and Kay Nelson, of Canton, Ohio, Neven and Jolene Elza and Julie Klouda of West Farmington, Ohio, and Mrs. Retha Jones, of Baltimore, Maryland.

Marietta Stemple returned last Tuesday from a week's visit with her niece and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Dixon, at St. Louis, Missouri. While there she went to see the Precious Moments Chapel, with beautiful stained glass windows, the Bass Pro Shop, the Winston Churchill Memorial (moved from England and reconstructed) at Westminster College, where they also have a portion of the Berlin Wall, and the Doll Museum at Carthage. Coming from the airport in Lewisburg with her daughter and daughter-in-law, they had an accident when a truck backed over the front end of the car but no one was injured.

Jane Kirk of Glen Burnie, Maryland, spent the weekend of May 20 with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Michael. She was accompanied home by her mother for a two week visit. While there they attended the high school commencement exercises of granddaughter, Laura Kirk, from Old Mill Senior High. Laura is employed as a summer counselor at Camp Carysbrook, Rimer, Virginia, and will enter Frostburg State College in the fall.

I saw you with God last Night

I saw you with God last night

I was mad when God took you from me
But last night I could plainly see
That He saved you from lots of misery
The smile upon your face told me
That you were happy as you could be
And I'm gonna ask God if He'll save a place for me.

Circuit Judge dismisses abduction charges, allows murder charges to stand; Eyewitnesses testify

by Pam Pritt

At the end of the second week of the Rainbow Murder trial, Jacob Wilson Beard has been acquitted of the lesser charge of abduction with intent to defile, a sex related charge.

Circuit Judge Charles Lobban dismissed the abduction charges against Beard, saying that no witness placed Beard speaking to the victims or conspiring with the other defendants to defile the women.

Lobban denied the defense motion for acquittal on two first degree murder charges, however, stating that two eyewitness testimonies had placed him at the scene of the double homicide.

Beard, 47, is the man the prosecution says pulled the trigger in the 1980 slayings of Nancy Santomero, 19, of Huntington, Long Island, New York, and Vicky Durian, 26, of Wellman Iowa. The women were traveling to the Rainbow Family World Peace Gathering in the Monongahela National Forest, but were never members of the Rainbow Family.

One witness testified that Beard was the only man he saw with a gun, but was unable to positively identify him as the triggerman.

Winters Charles Walton, 43, of Hillsboro, said that he was with co-defendants Richard Fowler and Bill McCoy on a groundhog hunting spree with a .22 pistol, drinking liquor and beer when they stopped on Droop Mountain and were told that there were two girls hitchiking in Renicks Valley.

The witness said that he wanted Fowler to take him home to Hillsboro before going into Greenbrier County to pick up the women. Walton said that Fowler told him they would go and "just look" at the women.

When they arrived in Renick Flats, they watched the women from the entrance to a secondary road and then stopped to ask if they wanted a ride, McCoy even helping them load their belongings into the van, and offering to share the beer, which one of them accepted, Walton recalled.

Fowler stopped at the home of Gerald Brown on Droop Mountain, Walton said, where McCoy made phone calls inviting others to come party with them and the "Rainbow Girls." According to Walton's recollection, Santomero and Durian found an opportunity to leave and started to hitchhike northward, but were retrieved by Fowler, McCoy and Walton.

Beard first appeared in the witness's testimony when the group arrived at Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park along with Brown, Arnold Cutlip and Johnny Lewis, Christine Cook and Buddy Adkison. The women talked to Cook, Walton attested.

Walton said that some of the other men began to make references to having sex with the women and they agreed to meet on Briery Knob.

When they arrived in Renick Flats, they watched the women from the entrance to a secondary road and then stopped to ask if they wanted a ride, McCoy even helping them load their belongings into the van, and offering to share the beer, which one of them accepted, Walton recalled.

Walton said that some of the other men began to make references to having sex with the women and they agreed to meet on Briery Knob.

"We knew where we were going," Walton testified.

Walton continued that Beard and Brown made plans to meet elsewhere and bring one truck—Brown's—to the appointed spot. The witness continued that the van traveled through the park to Briery Knob, stopping at Cutlip's driveway.

Walton said at this point Adkison was selling his truck to Cutlip and Cook had come there to get Adkison. He went on to say that during this stop, Beard began to drink some of Brown's liquor and the group traveled on up Briery Knob to a wide spot off the road Cutlip had recommended as "a good place to party."

The group began to drink more and Walton testified that although he drank both beer and liqour, he didn't think he was drunk. Beard and Brown got into the van, Brown began talking to the women, but Beard did not, the witness recalled.

Walton recalled that Cook came to the van to talk to the girls again before Adkison picked her up.

After Cook and Adkison departed, Walton said, Fowler and McCoy called for him to come into the van and bring his pistol to scare the girls. Walton said he refused to give McCoy his gun. Fowler held one girl by the arm from behind without a lot of struggle, Walton testified, while the other girl fought McCoy quite a bit and threatened to go to police.

"We kill people, we'll kill you all," McCoy said, according to Walton's testimony.

The girl McCoy struggled with got away from him and asked Walton why the men were doing this to them, Walton said. He replied to her that he wasn't doing anything, he said on the witness stand. McCoy then came across the van and got her, Walton remembered.

Walton said he got out of the van and was standing with Beard, Brown and Cutlip along the road when Fowler and McCoy gave up harassing and came out of the woods to "party," Walton testified. Walton said some younger person was at the scene, but he was unable to recall who it was. He said he had a few ideas, but nothing conclusive.

He continued that the girls were shaken and exited the van, also.

Walton testified that Larry Dean and one of his brothers came down Briery Knob from the opposite direction and Fowler invited them to "party," also. Dean parked his jeep up the hill on a road off the Briery Knob Road, Walton said, then invited him and Fowler to come up for Walton's testimony.

The girl McCoy struggled with got away from him and asked Walton why the men were doing this to them, Walton said. He replied to her that he wasn't doing anything, he said on the witness stand. McCoy then came across the van and got her, Walton remembered.

Walton said he got out of the van and was standing with Beard, Brown and Cutlip along the [illegible] when Fowler and McCoy gave up harassing and came out of the [illegible] "party," Walton testified. Walton said some younger person was at the scene, but he was unable to recall who it was. He said he had a few ideas, but nothing conclusive.

He continued that the girls were shaken and exited the van, also.

Walton testified that Larry Dean and one of his brothers came down Briery Knob from the opposite direction and Fowler invited them to "party," also. Dean parked his jeep up the hill on a road off the Briery Knob Road, Walton said, then invited him and Fowler to come up for "home brew." Fowler announced that he had some marijuana and more to drink, then the group got into the van, Walton testified.

Beard came inside and "wanted to try the pot," Walton said, and Brown may have tried some also. Cutlip remained outside the van alone, Walton testified.

Beard asked the Dean brothers if they had their rifle to show Brown and Cutlip, Walton said. Beard left the van and went up the hill to the parked jeep to get the gun.

Walton said he saw Beard come down the hill with the gun and head toward the back of the van. The back and rear passenger side windows were covered and Walton could not see what happened next, he said.

Walton said he could not clearly remember hearing any shots, but recalls that the occupants of the van were startled by something and jumped.

Walton said that one of the girls came to the van door and tried to get in, but backed away and started to run to the front of the van. She was followed closely by a person with a rifle, Walton testified, but he could not identify the triggerman.

Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford questioned Walton about the other defendants.

"Was it Arnie with the gun?" Weiford asked.

"No," Walton answered.

"Was it Gerald?"

"No."

"Was it Bill?"

"I don't know."

"Was it Richie?"

"He was in the van."

Walton testified that the next thing he recalled was Beard leaving in Brown's truck, alone, going "pretty fast."

Everyone was too scared to move at first, Walton testified, but one commented, "If she had got in the van, some of us might have got it, too."

Dean, he said, stopped at the van when leaving the scene in his jeep and told Fowler to leave the Deans' names out of it if he could, a request also made by the younger person Walton was unable to identify.

Dean's brother kept saying that he had just gotten the rifle and "it wasn't any good now," Walton testified.

Dean's brother kept saying that he had just gotten the rifle and "it wasn't any good now," Walton testified.

Walton said he began to lose consciousness and couldn't clearly recall anything about the next events.

Walton obviously struggled to remember details on the witness stand, saying, "I feel like I can remember something, but I can't remember too much...pieces come."

When he regained consciousness, Walton said, Fowler, Brown and McCoy were in the van, which was still in the same place.

Walton said McCoy offered him more liquor, and told him that nothing had happened. Walton continued that he lay back down and Fowler requested that he move over because the van owner was intoxicated too, telling Walton, "I don't know what's going on, either."

Walton lost his composure as he recounted that when Fowler got out of the van, Walton turned over to look out the van door. Fowler came up over the bank saying he couldn't do it, Walton testified, wiping tears from his eyes.

Walton said he awoke in the field, when McCoy said to him, "What did you do it for, what did you do it for?"

"What did I do?" Walton said he asked McCoy.

"Shoot them girls," Walton said McCoy answered.

Walton said he told McCoy he hadn't shot the girls, but looked for his own pistol to see if it had been fired.

McCoy hit him in the stomach and knocked him down, Walton said, because he had wanted to "go to the law."

McCoy instructed Walton not to inform police, Walton testified.

Weiford asked Walton if he remembered seeing the girls.

"I saw something, but I don't know exactly what it was," Walton answered, again losing his composure.

Walton said he couldn't recall much of what happened in the field, but testified, "I could see where they were moving something through the weeds out in front of the van...it's all pretty fuzzy right there."

Walton said he got back into the van and went to sleep, but Fowler woke him back at the scene of the murder, to help pick up the beer cans from the party. But Walton said he told Fowler that he was too sick to help.

"We might want to party here again. We don't want the law to watch this place," Walton quoted Fowler as saying.

Walton said he got back into the van and lost consciousness again, but was awakened by Fowler, McCoy and Brown talking. Brown was asking whether he'd ever see his truck again, Walton recounted, and Fowler wondered, "What Jacob had done it for."

Walton said he again asked the others if they should tell police what had happened.

McCoy "jumped out of the passenger seat," Walton testified, " and grabbed hold of me."

"You'd better not go to the...law, you'll go to jail," Walton testified McCoy threatened him, "You won't get to ride your motorcycle."

Fowler backed up McCoy, saying "You don't want to go to the law, you'll have to go to court. You don't want that, do you?" Walton quoted.

Walton again broke down as he testified.

The other eyewitness was living with co-defendant Arnie Cutlip on Briery Knob when the murders occurred.

Johnny Washington Lewis, 60, said that he and Cutlip delivered a load of locust posts to B. F. Harrill on that day and returned to Hillsboro to the local bar where they met Christine Cook and Buddy Adkison, who was negotiating the sale of his pickup truck to Cutlip.

After purchasing gas for the truck, they stopped at the entrance to Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park where Fowler, McCoy, the two girls, Beard and Brown were congregated, Lewis testified. Lewis said Cutlip got out of the truck and conversed with the group. Cook spoke with the women near the van, Lewis said. Cutlip, Lewis, Adkison and Cook left the park entrance and delivered the truck to Cutlip's home, Lewis testified, then stopped at the back at park entrance again, where Cook spoke with the two women another time.

Lewis said that he and Cutlip traveled to Briery Knob where they parked behind Brown's truck and Fowler's van. Lewis said that Cutlip spoke with Brown. The girls were standing close to the van, Lewis testified.

Lewis said he heard a gun crack, saw Beard's arm rise and a girl fall. Lewis said that Beard was facing the other direction and was approximately two feet from the girls. Lewis said he heard the gun three times that he can remember and each time saw Beard's arm rise. Lewis Lewis said he heard the gun three times that he can remember and each time saw Beard's arm rise. Lewis testified that the sound of the gunfire came from Beard's direction.

"The girls didn't get up," Lewis testified.

Lewis identified Beard in the courtroom under questioning by Weiford.

"Is that the same man who shot these girls?" Weiford asked.

"Yes," Lewis replied.

Christine Cook Borchart testified on Wednesday, May 19, that she had not spoken to nor even seen any women she thought might have been traveling to the Rainbow Family Gathering while she was at the Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park, although she did recall some discussion about the gathering. She also said that she did not know Beard in 1980 and did not recall his being at the park entrance.

"If that's him, I still don't know him," Borchart said, indicating the defendant.

Both Walton and Lewis have been granted immunity from prosecution by the state in exchange for their testimonies against the defendants. But both men say they were intimidated by a state police officer before they gave their statements that incriminated Beard.

Walton said that when he was picked up by two officers at Edray, he was taken down the Old Campbelltown Road and threatened by a large state police officer defense counsel Stephen Farmer identified as Sergeant Robert Estepp.

Walton said that Estepp threatened to hurt him so it wouldn't be visible and made inferences that he could be shot and his body left in a ditch. Walton testified that Estepp also told him that he "was the shooter" and he had better "tell the truth."

Walton said that upon arrival at the Marlinton State Police Office, he was taken into a room alone with Estepp, who continued to physically abuse him.

Walton said the officer "jerked" him off his chair, threw him in the floor and placed his foot against his head, then threatened to "kick it through the door."

"He wanted me to say who did it," Walton testified, "so I said I thought maybe Jake Beard."

Walton said he made the statement to police to "get them off my back."

Although Walton said the police officer's threats and physical abuse had caused him to make his original statement, and that, accompanied with the time he spent in jail, had made him remember more about the shootings, Walton maintained that he pressured himself to recall what had actually happened.

"I forced myself to remember," Walton said.

"I forced myself to remember," Walton said.

Lewis testified that the same officer had flung handcuffs in his face, causing him to "jump back" in order to keep from being hit before he gave his statement to police in April 1992.

Lewis also testified that he had changed his statement last year to say that he had not seen Beard shoot the women because Michael Jordan, a Bureau of Criminal Investigations Corporal, had told him he was lying when he said he had been at the scene.

Weiford asked for an internal investigation regarding the alleged abuse of these witnesses by Estepp in July of last year after the charges against the other men were dropped.

According to Farmer, Walton has made numerous references to the murders seeming like a "dream." Walton said he knew he had made those statements, but maintained that he was present when the girls were killed.

"I couldn't dream all this," Walton said.

Walton said he remained in jail for his own protection after he was granted immunity, but said later that he wasn't sure of whom to be afraid.

The woman who traveled with Santomero and Durian and parted company with them in Richmond prior to their deaths was on the stand Thursday morning.

Liz Johndrow, of Brattleboro, Vermont, said that the three left Wellman, Iowa, on Friday, June 20, 1980, and spent four nights on the road before parting near Richmond, Virginia. She was unable to specifically recall a date or a time, but said she believed she left her comapanions on June 24, 1980. None of the women had watches, she testified.

Both attorneys on Beard's defense team reacted visibly to Johndrow's initial testimony.

The women had bypassed the gathering and traveled to Sullivan's Island, South Carolina, to see the Atlantic Ocean before hitchhiking on to the gathering, Johndrow testified, but inclement weather kept them from swimming.

They caught a ride on an empty Trailways bus heading north, Johndrow recalled, then stopped outside Rocky Mount, North Carolina to camp near the interstate for the night. She called home, Johndrow said, and found out that her father was to be married in three days and decided to skip the gathering to be with her family.

"We traveled a little farther together," Johndrow said, "then parted at Richmond."

Santomero and Durian were concerned that she would be alone, Johndrow said shakily, and waited with her until they were sure she had a safe ride before catching a ride of their own.

Johndrow could not recall how the women were dressed when she left them, she said, but did remember giving them her map with directions to the gathering that had certain routes "discouraged as potentially hostile."

Defense attorney Stephen Farmer showed Johndrow newspaper clippings from July 1980 that said she left Santomero and Durian on the 25th, the day the women were killed, at about 1:00 p.m. in Richmond, making it impossible for the women to be sighted in Renicks Valley between 2:00 and 3:00 p.m., Farmer said.

He asked Johndrow if she had discussed any evidence with the chief investigator, 1st Sgt. R. R. Alkire. She said only that she could not remember a specific date, but recalled being on the road with Santomero and Durian four nights.

Johndrow said she didn't recall giving a date she left Santomero and Durian in 1980, but did remember reading a newspaper article that said it was the 25th.

Alkire testified later that he and Johndrow discussed only the details of the trip from Iowa to Virginia, not specific dates.

The previous owner of the Richard Fowler's blue van testified to the changes he had made to the vehicle before selling it to Fowler.

Jerome Davis said he had bought the van in 1974 when it had a dull blue metallic finish and then had the van repainted with light blue metallic paint in 1976. When the new paint job began to chip around the rocker panels, Davis said, he painted the area himself with black enamel paint.

Davis said that he had macrame curtains in the back windows of the van and had a quilt over the rear window on the passenger side, which was insulated and paneled over inside the vehicle.

The witness said that the van was carpeted on the inside and had a bed built from the driver's seat to the rear door.

Fowler bought the van from him in 1978 or 1979, Davis said, and that when he had last seen the vehicle it still looked the same.

Sgt. John R. Giacalone, Criminal Investigations Bureau lab, testified in front of the jury about analyzing the paint chips which the prosecution says came from Fowler's van.

Giacalone said that the pictures of the van were consistent with the chips he analyzed, but had no paint from the suspect vehicle for comparison.

Giacalone said that he found further information that the FBI did not list on their 1980 report.

He also testified that the model of the vehicle could not be determined.

Defense counsel took their turn at presenting evidence in testimony Friday afternoon after the state rested its case.

Corporal Michael Jordan, West Virginia Bureau of Criminal Investigations, testified that he had interviewed eyewitness Johnny Lewis on June 17, 1992, with the intention of "blowing apart" the man's statement which incriminated Beard.

Jordan testified that he had not accused Johnny Lewis of lying about being at the scene of the murders. Jordan said Lewis must have lied on the witness stand if he said that Jordan had made the accusatory statement.

Jordan said he became suspicious of Lewis' statement when Lewis used phrases such as "to the best of my knowledge..." and "the best I can recall...," phrases Jordan did not believe Lewis commonly used.

The corporal said he felt that Lewis was easily intimidated or suggestible, but said he felt he had done neither while interviewing the man.

Jordan testified that he felt the other eyewitness' statement was weak in matching the physical evidence of the case. But Jordan testified that Walton's account gained strength on a trip to the scene of the murders, but that Walton said some of the events felt like a dream.

Jordan admitted that although Walton was unsure of some of the facts concerning the case, no officer bolstered Walton's memory by relating the evidence to him.

The judge allowed Jordan to give minimal testimony regarding a convicted serial killer who first confessed, then later denied killing two women in a remote area of West Virginia.

Joseph Paul Franklin drew a map outlining the "Beckley County West Virginia" area where he said he had murdered these women, Jordan said.

Joseph Paul Franklin drew a map outlining the "Beckley County West Virginia" area where he said he had murdered these women, Jordan said.

Jordan testified that Franklin, who is housed in a maximum security prison in Marion, Illinois, had confessed to committing the 1980 murders to Wisconsin authorities and then members of the Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms Bureau. But when two West Virginia State Police investigators traveled to interview, Franklin, the man denied committing the murders and now refuses to speak with anyone about the case.

Lobban said he only allowed the testimony concerning Franklin because the man had made varying confessions and denials regarding the case.

Jordan was not one of the West Virginia officers who interrogated Franklin.

Lewis' former attorney testified for the defense Friday.

Marilyn Thompson said that her client had given two statements to police prior to having benefit of counsel. She testified that Lewis gave a statement on April 15, 1992 that made no mention of witnessing the slayings, but his April 16, 1992 statement described seeing the two women killed.

Thompson said that when Lewis was granted immunity in June 1992, she make it clear to the prosecution that she would not guarnatee to which statement Lewis would testify on the stand in front of a jury.

Thompson's testimony gave no indication that Lewis had ever said he witnessed the murders in her presence, but she testified that Lewis appeared frightened when he was taken to the scene.

Thompson's testimony regarding Jordan's interview with Lewis was glowing.

"He conducted the most non-threatening, non-leading interview I was witness to," Thompson recalled. She said that the BCI corporal had not accused Lewis of lying in her presence.

Thompson said she perceived Alkire to be intimidating to Lewis on occasion. Lewis' own testimony was that Alkire never intimidated him.

She said that she was not present in October 1992 when Lewis gave a video-taped statement that described his seeing Beard shoot two women on Briery Knob. She said that her client could have waived counsel for the interview, but she had not informed him of that right.

"You have a duty of loyalty as well as zealous representation," Thompson testified.

Thompson was subpoenaed for "matters not privileged" by the attorney-client relationship. She withdrew as Lewis' attorney the week prior to Beard's trial.

A court ruling Tuesday may have tied the hands of the prosecution for the remainder of the testimony from defense witnesses.

After allowing defense counsel liberal leeway in cross-examining the state's witnesses, Lobban ruled that the state must "limit cross-examination to issues addressed in direct examination."

In testimony Tuesday, a man who Walton testified was present when the slayings occurred, stated that he was not.

Riverside Produce

Larry Dean, of Hillsboro, said that he was employed by a paving company operating near Hinton or Beckley in June 1980 and that he had worked that day. Briery Knob was not on his direct route home, Dean said.

Dean said that he had been questioned at length by police.

"They tried to get me to say I was there and I wasn't there, " Dean said.

He also testified that he rarely drove the jeep Walton said he saw on Briery Knob and that he did not keep a gun in his vehicle.He said he saw none of the defendants on June 25, 1980.

He did say that after police questioned him, he believed that his brother-in-law, Jacob Beard, may have committed the murders.

He said he told his sister, Linda Beard, that the police were trying to say that Beard had killed the girls. He said his sister replied that "He didn't do it."

Dean's brother, Laymond Dean, said he was on Briery Knob near the scene of the murders earlier in the day while he was collecting ginseng. Laymond Dean testified that he left the area between 3:00 and 4:00 p.m.

Laymond Dean said that later in the evening he went catfishing with two companions and co-defendant Bill McCoy. He said the men left the Droop Mountain-Lobelia area for Buckeye between 7:00 and 9:00 p.m.

Gerald Brown's former wife testified Tuesday that she was home preparing for company on the day the women were murdered and although Walton's testimony includes a stop by the Brown home sometime in the afternoon of June 25, 1980, she said she saw no one all day.

Drema Brown said that while getting ready for her mother and sister to arrive from Ohio, she ran out of a cleaning fluid and went to the Droop Cash Store to purchase more. The store had none in stock, and she went from there to her aunt's home to borrow some, but the woman was not at home.

Drema Brown, now of Newland, North Carolina, testified that she went on to Hillsboro for cleaning supplies, but was only gone for a total of an hour.

She testified that it was her common practice to lock her home when she left and that Gerald Brown had lost his own housekey.

She said she saw none of the defendants at her home that day and added that Gerald Brown did not bring his companions home to drink.

Drema Brown also testified that she saw no one outside her home washing out a van that evening. She said that the outside water access came from the back of her trailer

Drema Brown also testified that she saw no one outside her home washing out a van that evening. She said that the outside water access came from the back of her trailer.

Gerald Brown, she said, came home about dusk, a few hours after her mother and sister arrived. Her former husband was drinking, Drema Brown said, and wanted her to go with him to take his log truck from Viney Mountain to Hill's Creek. He was driving his maroon and white Chevrolet pickup truck, Drema Brown recalled.

She said that her visitors left to see other family on Droop Mountain and she went with Gerald Brown, although she had not wanted to make the trip. She said they returned home about 11:00 p.m. and had seen a police car on a secondary road they traveled.

She said she made the same statement to police when Gerald Brown was arrested in 1983 for the murders.

She said that she generally did not see her husband from the time he left for work in the morning until he returned, usually late at night.

Defense counsel began to build an alibi for their client.

Patricia Pritt, of Droop Mountain, said that she attended a Board of Education meeting with Beard that night and had, in fact waited for his arrival outside the meeting.

She said she sat next to him during the meeting and he did not appear to be drinking.

Pritt said that the defendant rode home with her and three others after his wife had to leave the meeting early.

Pritt said that the meeting was delayed perhaps half an hour due to the large crowd.

Karen Willis, Greenbrier Tractor Sales record keeper, testified that although Beard's time card was not punched that evening, his position as a mechanic made that a common practice.

Most mechanics went out on service calls to farms, Willis said, and if they did not return to the shop that evening, wrote the time in the next day.

According to his time card which was entered as evidence, Beard punched in at 12:59 p.m. and his handwritten time says 5: 15 p.m. Beard did not return to the shop for the next two days, which are marked as service calls. June 25, 1980 has no indication of whether Beard made a service call or a delivery.

Work orders for 1980 were destroyed after a decade, Willis said.

The trial continues into its tenth day as we go to press, but is expected to conclude this week. Daily reports on the trial are on WVMR.

Convicted man sentenced to serve consecutive terms

by Pam Pritt

Circuit Judge Frank Jolliffe imposed the maximum sentences possible under the law on a man convicted last month of abusing and neglecting his former girlfriend's child.

Jolliffe sentenced Thomas Michael Ewing to confinement in the county jail for 12 months and a $1,000 fine for involuntary manslaughter, 2-10 years in a state penitentiary on the charges of child abuse resulting in serious bodily injury and 1-10 years in a state penitentiary on child neglect resulting in serious bodily injury. The judge imposed consecutive sentences, meaning Ewing could spend as little as 3 or as many as 20 years behind bars.

The 26-year-old man was convicted last month in Pocahontas County Circuit Court of the abuse, neglect and involuntary manslaughter of Alisha Nicole Bennett, 2 1/2.

Ewing will get credit for time served on the misdemeanor offense of involuntary manslaughter. Ewing has been lodged in the Pocahontas County Jail since August of last year.

Jolliffe said that Ewing was a "fortunate individual." The judge commented that the defendant's own testimony could have brought commitments that the defendant's own testimony could have brought about a conviction of murder in the first degree.

"The only time you haven't been in trouble is when you've been in jail," Joliffe reprimanded Ewing. "Probation is denied. You represent a substantial risk to commit another crime."

Ewing's attorney, Marilyn Thompson, asked that her client be placed in protective custody when he is transported to a state facility.

Thompson also asked for a directed verdict of acquittal and made a motion for a new trial. Jolliffe denied both motions.

Both the judge and Special Prosecutor received letters in support of Ewing as late as Friday morning.

Weiford said that he was "amazed" by the apparent show of support for Ewing by individuals who had testified in the trial.

He said that the investigation and the subsequent prosecution of the case were criticized by the authors of these letters.

"My belief is that this investigation was conducted thoroughly. I am pleased with the investigation, the presentation to the Grand Jury. I am pleased and accept the evidence as it was presented to this court," Weiford stated.

Ewing accepted the lecture and the sentence impassively.

Jolliffe also sentenced Lisa Bennett, 26, Friday for attempted child neglect resulting in serious bodily injury.

Jolliffe also sentenced Lisa Bennett, 26, Friday for attempted child neglect resulting in serious bodily injury.

The judge reserved some harsh words for the deceased child's mother, also.

"You permitted your child to be neglected. You permitted your child to be abused," Jolliffe said sternly.

"You received a favorable plea bargain because the state needed your testimony," he continued.

Jolliffe ruled that the woman was not suitable for probation and sentenced her to one year in the county jail with credit for time served.

Bennett told the court she was "sorry" for what had happened.

"I take full responsibility," she said.

Bennett has already served over 200 days in the Pocahontas County Jail.

Ewing also pleaded guilty Friday to attempted manufacture of a controlled substance and was sentenced to one year in the county jail with credit for time served.

Marlinton Vikings Superbowl Champs!

Although the weather was dreadful, the Marlinton Vikings found Saturday to be a beautiful day. Both teams became Super Bowl champions.

Due to a forfeit by the Millboro Wildcats the Vikings B Team was an automatic winner.

The A Team had to work a little harder for their trophy, defeating the Highland Bobcats, 7-0.

The only touchdown was scored by Michael Stewart, with the point after being added by Kevin King.

The Vikings express sincere appreciation to all who helped with their successful season.

Bridgeport Stops Pocahontas

When the teams took the floor to begin the second half last Wednesday, it still seemed anyone's game. Pocahontas trailed Bridgeport by just four, 32-28, in the first round of the West Virginia High School Boys Basketball Tournament.

The Warriors had led by one, 14-13, at the end of the first quarter before falling behind by four in the second. Then Bridgeport effectively put the game away sinking a pair of three-pointers in the first 1:06 of the third quarter to go up 38-28. The Warriors never fully recovered, trailing by 12 at the end of the third, 38-50, as well as at the game's end, 67-55.

Bridgeport's Matt Kerns held the Warriors' scoring leader, senior guard Brian Beverage, to just 16 points, 10 fewer than his season average of 26. "We certainly have to get big numbers out of Bev to have a chance," said Warrior head coach Bob Sheets.

While Pocahontas made a dismal 22 of 63 shots attempted, the scrappy Warrior defense out-rebounded Bridgeport 44-39. Scott Garber led the Warriors in rebounding with 13 and Jayson Cain pulled down 11.

"I think the whole game can be summed up in that they hit the big shots and we didn't," Sheets said. The Warriors only sank four of 22 three-point shots. "The threes have been good to us all season," Sheets added, "but in this particular game

Beverage Named Captain of All-NRVC First Team

Senior guard Brian Beverage of the Pocahontas County Warriors was named captain of the New River Valley All-Conference First Team this week. The honor recognizes Beverage as the conferences top player for the 1992-93 season.

Scott Garber, a senior forward for the Warriors, was named to the second team, while Stephen Taylor garnered an honorable mention. Both the first and second teams had eight members, and 12 were given honorable mention.

Bridgeport went on to win the Class AA championship beating Oceana on Saturday. "We can look at Bridgeport taking it all and say, 'Well, we got beat by the state champions two years in a row,'" Sheets said. Last year's Class AA champs Greenbrier West beat Pocahontas in regional tournament play in 1992.

"Yes, everyone's disappointed," Sheets concluded, "but this is a tremendous group of boys and I feel privileged to work with them. And next year we'll come, work hard and try to do it again."

Pierce Responds to State Newspaper Allegations

by Pam Pritt

In a telephone interview Monday, Dr. William Pierce responded to allegations of a connection between his Cosmotheist Church and the Branch Davidians involved in a stand-off with the U. S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Waco, Texas.

Pierce said he was "appalled at the irresponsibility" of the Charleston Daily Mail in alleging that there were firearms located in his remote Mill Point residence. "Until somebody has any evidence, it is irresponsible to build up these analogies," Pierce said.

"What is the similarity between me and the Branch Davidians?" Pierce questioned.

The lengthy article in The Charleston Daily Mail quoted former Sheriff Jerry Dale, State Police Sgt. J. A. Casto, Sheriff C. C. Beck and County Commissioner Dana Moyers. All said they were aware of Pierce's presence in Mill Point, but were unaware of any threats to the Pocahontas County community.

The comments ran the gamut from minimal to extreme concern.

Beck stated, "He concerns me,

Dale, whose interest in Pierce began shortly after the former college professor arrived here, has emerged as Pierce's chief local watchdog.

Dale was quoted as saying Pierce was "frightening, whether he is building up arms or publishing racist propaganda." The former sheriff said that his concern would continue.

The National Alliance, a white supremacist organization of which Pierce is chairman, does have a recorded recruiting message answering a Pocahontas County telephone number. The message begins, "The white race is truly Earth's most endangered species. All over America the gates have been opened and the land that once was ours is being flooded by a tide of non-white immigrants..."

Pierce purchased the mountainside property in late 1984 and began a type of commune. Although he has at times opened his church services to the public, he has kept a very low profile in the

Despite the suspicions of people in law enforcement, like former Sheriff Dale, Pierce has never been charged with any weapons violations. "The allegations made by Jerry Dale are not true," Pierce said.

County Commission Report

The County Commission met for a regular meeting on Tuesday of last week.

Linda Simmons, Chairman of the Pocahontas County Dramas, Fairs & Festivals Committee reviewed for the Commission the group's proposed budget for 1993. The budget was prepared at a meeting of the committee on March 2. Other members of the committee attending the Commission meeting were Ruth Taylor, Tom Lanier, and Joe Stevens. Also present were Spencer Videon and B. J. Hungate from Snowshoe Resort. The funds for the programs the committee helps to support come from Hotel/Motel Tax income.

The budget calls for spending $27,300 as follows: Cass Homecoming - $500, "Cass, The Play" - $1500, Artist-in-Residence program - $1000, Pioneer Days - $3000, Autumn Harvest Festival - $500, Durbin Lions Club (for a Durbin Days activity) - $600, Durbin Days - $3,000, Droop Mountain Re-enactment - $500, Chili Cook-off - $300, County 4-H Livestock Fair - $400, Pearl S. Buck Birthplace for play - $1,000, Snowshoe for WV Symphony - $10,000, WVU Extension Service - $5,000

Mrs. Simmons noted that most of the grants are less than the amounts requested by the organizations.

Mr. Videon discussed the plans Snowshoe has to expand the West Virginia Symphony weekend this coming summer to a ten day program. Eventually it is hoped to giving it to the PCHS band. The motion was approved.

Fred Burns, Jr., met with the Commission concerning the county's support for their Greenbrier Economic Development Corporation. The group was organized four years ago to provide economic development in Pocahontas, Greenbrier, and Monroe counties. Mr. Burns explained that the GEDC has gotten through its organizational years and is now up and going. The need now is to stabilize the funding for the GEDC. Two approaches are being considered. One is for the three counties to contract with GEDC at an amount based on population. The other is to have the Legislature create a multi-county development authority.

Mr. Burns said the effort is underway to have the legislation passed creating the multi-county authority, but it may not get done this session. He asked the Commission to pass a resolution supporting the legislation for a multi-county development authority and agreeing to a contract with GEDC for the coming year if the legislation is not passed at this session. The cost to the county will be $0.625 per citizen the first year and $1.25 in the following years. The Commissioners voted to approve the resolution.

John Mortimer appeared before the Commission with questions concerning the resignation of Jerry Heinemann from the Pocahontas Development Authority. Mr. Heinemann's resignation from the

Mrs. Simmons noted that most of the grants are less than the amounts requested by the organizations.

Mr. Videon discussed the plans Snowshoe has to expand the West Virginia Symphony weekend this coming summer to a ten day program. Eventually it is hoped to have a six week program of activities similar to the music festival held at the Aspen ski area in Colorado each year. Mr. Videon pointed out that although the opening of the golf course this year will strengthen the resort's ability to attract summer business, only about 200 people can play a day so additional activities are needed. He said most people tend to head towards water for their summer activities and this pattern needs to be broken. Mr. Videon said this year will feature concerts by the symphony orchestra two weekends with other activities during the week. Snowshoe is working with the University of Charleston on the mid-week program which will include speakers and chamber music programs. The grand opening of the golf course will also be held during this week.

Mr. Videon also quickly reviewed some other items on the progress being made by Snowshoe. He said the number of year round jobs at the resort has increased from 50 to 220 in the past three years and the total payroll comes to $8,000,000. He also said most condominums that have been in the hands of the Resolution Trust Corporation since the Snowshoe bankruptcy are now sold and back on the tax rolls.

Mrs. Simmons said the county legislation is not passed at this session. The cost to the county will be $0.625 per citizen the first year and $1.25 in the following years. The Commissioners voted to approve the resolution.

John Mortimer appeared before the Commission with questions concerning the resignation of Jerry Heinemann from the Pocahontas Development Authority. Mr. Heinemann's resignation from the PDA was accepted at the Commission's February 16 meeting. The resignation was based on a letter in this paper in which Mr. Heinemann said he would resign from the PDS if the private group Progress for Pocahontas would dissolve itself. Although PFP has not been dissolved, the Commissioner accepted Mr. Heinemann's resignation from the PDA "without condition".

Mr. Mortimer asked if the Comission actually has a letter from Mr. Heinemann stating his unconditional resignation from the PDA. The letter produced was a duplicate of the letter that was in the paper with a note attached. The note said for the Commission to consider his letter in the paper as a formal request to resign from the PDA "according to the terms set forth."

Mr. Mortimer questioned if this is a letter of resignation without conditions. He claimed that what the Commission has does have conditions on Mr. Heinemann's resignation.

Mr. Mortimer and Mr. Alderman got into a heated discussion for a time over charges Mr. Mortimer may have made against Mr. Heinemann. Mr. Alderman said he would not discuss charges against Mr. Heinemann without him being at the meeting.

Festivals budget for a second time at the end of the meeting. She provided information on the amount each group had requested.

In discussing the proposed budget, Commission President Norman Alderman said he was opposed to the appropriation to the Artist-in-Residence program and "Cass", The Play. Mr Alderman has previously expressed his opposition to the Artist-in-Residence program. When questioned on why he was opposed to the funds for the play, Mr. Alderman admitted it was because the funds are admininstered by the Pocahontas Supply Company. (PSC is a branch of WVMR and was set up to handle funds for special projects.)

Mr. Alderman suggested that a contribution be made to the high school band to support band camp. Mrs. Simmons noted that the band had not put in a request for funds.

Following support for the Cass play project from others at the meeting, who noted its value as a drama experience for the county's youth as well as its part in giving visitors to the the Cass Railroad a feeling for what life was like in the logging boom days, Mr. Alderman dropped his opposition to that expenditure. He moved to accept the committee's proposed budget with the only change being taking the $1000 from the Artist-in-Residence project and issue is at an end.

Mr. Alderman moved to put Mr. Mortimer on the Development Authority. Mr. Moyers and Mr. Mynuk both quickly expressed their disapproval of that, and Mr. Mortimer said he is not interested in being on the Authority.

Michael Drusinsky, President, and Larry Evans, Vice-President, of Industrial Timber and Land Company, and Attorney David Thompson met with the Commission on two items concerning the company's facility at Edray (the former Mid-American Molding and Dimension plant which ITL purchased about a year ago.)

Mr. Drusinsky said ITL wants to expand the Edray facility and will provide the necessary funding itself but is requesting tax abatement on the expansion.

Mr. Evans explained ITL has a worldwide market for hardwood and needs more kiln capacity. He said the plans call for building a lumber pre-dryer and additonal kilns as well as adding new inspection lines and an automatic stacker. The estimated cost is $2,000,000. Mr. Evans said the company has a policy of not guaranteeing the number of jobs an expansion might bring but only making a forecast. He said the expansion would triple the plant's capacity and should at least double the employment. At the present time, ITL has 17 employees at Edray.

Mr. Drusinksy said the company is asking for a five year exemption on real estate and personal property taxes on the expanison.

Mr, Evans noted that time is an important factor in having a decision from the Commission as the construction season is near. The project is scheduled to be completed by the end of the summer.

The commissioners discussed the request both while the ITL representatives were present and later in the meeting. ITL had requested a tax exemption at the time it purchased the facility but this was not approved. The issue of fairness was discussed. It was noted that both Cramer and Interstate Lumber companies are expanding their facilities in the county but have not asked for a tax exemption. The Commission did grant Beckwith Lumber Company an exemption on the taxes it would pay on its new mill over what it was paying on the mill that burned.

Mr. Moyer asked where do we draw the line in tax abatements. Are they only for large employers or also available to the corner store?

During the discussion on the tax abatement later in the meeting, the idea of a graduated exemption, starting at 100% and reducing to a lower percentage over the five. It was decided to approach the company with a tax exemption of 100% for the first three years, 75% the fourth and 50% the fifth. Again, the proposed exemption is only on the expansion, not the entire plant.

they should do it and stop the continuning argument.

The Commission never did provide the tannery with a way to get the flood plain permit they need.

Mr. Alderman turned again to Progress for Pocahontas and the Development Authority. He said that since PFP has decided to continue in existence and with the same members as the Authority, he wants to have rulings from the State Ethics Commission on the two items. One is the action taken back in December when money was transferred from the Authority to PFP. The other is the two groups having the same members.

Mr. Mynuk said he didn't mind asking for an opinion but does not want to see the issue blown out of proportion. Mr. Moyers asked if all of this is moot since the money involved has gone to the purchase of the Denmar facility. He said he feels this will be seen as another attack on the Authority members and continue the hard feelings.

Mr. Alderman said he believes these people need to get on one horse or the other. He said there is no reason not to have two groups but they should be totally separate.

Mr. Mynuk said he will go along with the request for an opinion from the Ethics Commission but feels the Authority members have done nothing wrong.

The motion to request the ruling passed on a 2 -1 vote with Mr. Moyers casting the no vote.

Mr. Moyers reported that there is the feeling by at least some of the members of the hospital Board of

It was decided to approach the company with a tax exemption of 100% for the first three years, 75% the fourth and 50% the fifth. Again, the proposed exemption is only on the expansion, not the entire plant. The Commission asked Assessor Dolan Irvine to put the proposal in writing and communicate with ITL.

The other item discussed by the ITL people was problems with Workers Compensation. Mr. Drusinsky said Mid-America was behind in its payments to the compensation and ITL is being saddled with this as well as Mid-America's claim experience rating. He noted there is no connection between ITL and the previous names and ITL has not had the claims Mid-America had.

Mr. Drusinsky expressed his frustration at not being able to get a decision from the Workers Comp office or Charleston on ITL's request for a change in claim experience rating.

Mr. Moyers noted that a bill on reform of the workers compensation system is to be introduced in the Legislature. He also said he would contact State Senator Walt Helmick to help ITL get a response from Workers Comp officials.

Sheriff C. C. Beck reported to the Commission that The River Place restaurant is now supplying the meals for the jail. He said he sought bids from the restaurants in town and The River Place was the only one interested. The price Sheriff Beck said the inmates were pleased with the food. The question of whether having a restaurant provide the food meets the law's requirement for meals to be approved by a qualified nutritionist was discussed with Prosecuting Attorney Dave Arrington but not resolved.

Sheriff Beck said he has also sought bids on medicine for the jail. He reported that the first payment hsd been sent in by the telephone company from the 911 fee.

The Commission met in executive session with Mr. Beck and Mr. Arrington on a personnel matter.

Several times during the meeting the Commission discussed the need Howes Leather Company has for a flood plain ordinance permit for a project at the tannery at Frank. A lagoon needs to be constructed to hold discharge that cannot go into the river at times of low flow. Since the turnover in the Prosecuting Attorney's office the first of the year, the county does not have a flood plain permit officer. Without the permit the company cannot proceed with the work.

As usual when it comes to the flood plain ordinance, the Commission got into a rehash of all the arguments about the ordinance that have been an unpleasant feature of commission meetings for several years. At one point Mr. Moyers suggested to his fellow commissioners that if they want to eliminate the flood plain ordinance

Message from Commissioner Dana Moyers

Dear Reader:

The past few weeks of Commission work has been exciting and frustrating for some of our citizens and myself who serve on various boards and committees. Some hot topics: Denmar can produce jobs again if we can turn the property over to the Department of Corrections. The county budget looks even more disheartening, due to the back wages owed to law enforcement officers according to a Wage and Hour audit. The hospital will soon have a new administrator facing the challenging task of paying for the new facility.

Let's look at these areas: The Denmar Prison Project could be one of the best things that could take place in southern Pocahontas County. A bleak future faces the Town of Hillsboro without a job base to support its citizens. The school will always be in jeopardy if it lacks students that justify its existence. The hospital needs the revenue from the employees and the prison population to have any chance of paying the debt of the new building. We must work together as a county to see this project to its completion. Now is not the time for petty disagreements or for opening new wounds.

A point that must be made: The appointment of Jerry Heinemann to the Pocahontas Development Authority was a deplorable decision by my co-worker, Norman Alderman. Mr. Heinemann has, in my opinion, shown total disdain for

A point that must be made: The appointment of Jerry Heinemann to the Pocahontas Development Authority was a deplorable decision by my co-worker, Norman Alderman. Mr. Heinemann has, in my opinion, shown total disdain for his neighbors, and has little if anything to offer the county in the way of economic development. The genius of Mr. Heinemann's economic development skills appears to evolve around the novel concept of deficit non-spending — just ask his many creditors. Norman, you need to rescind your embarrassing appointment and I feel the people of Pocahontas County should demand no less.

Elected officials sometimes have to make hard decisions. One such decision currently facing us is the need to find $27,000 somewhere in the county coffers. The $27,000 dollars that Wage and Hour say we owe to our deputies for unpaid overtime and comp time must come out of the county budget. In order to pay this debt we must sacrifice something or someone. I'm truly happy that Norman, Mike and I stand together in condemning the mismanagement of any county office that could lead to this much financial hardship.

But the problem remains: where do we find $27,000? I invite you, Norman, to use this space in leading the public discussion of how to solve this problem.

how to solve this problem.

The hospital Board, of which I am a member, is currently interviewing administrative candidates for the hospital and have some very qualified people to consider. The conversion of acute beds to forensic beds, those secured for the use of prisoners, is being discussed by the Board. April will be the target date for the construction bids, and there is widespread agreement that we should emphasize local employment whenever we have the option. Admissions and census continue to run behind budgeted figures, collections continue to attract public comment, so I'm sure this new administrator will be very busy organizing the facility into a more efficient operation. The need for a modern health care facility grows greater every day. Thank goodness we can now realize this long sought out goal. I urge every citizen to get involved in our new hospital plan and in our county government's attempts to provide health care throughout the entire county.

Sincerely,

Dana Moyers

School Talk

The budgeting process for th upcoming school year is we underway; the school board an budget advisory committee ar working to plan for anticipated be tightening. A cutback in the centr office staff has been announced, a well as a number of reductions teaching positions at schools whe enrollment is falling. Th superintendent has also proposed number of service personnel cuts.

However, it seems clear th more savings are needed than w be realized through these persou actions. From where can th come? In order to get t brainstorming process started, compiled a list of ideas I had hea concerning possible savings. Th list includes suggestions offered nine different people-none of th originated with me, nor with t Budget Advisory Committee. He are some areas that have be suggested, listed in no particu order, and without evaluating merit of particular suggestions:

1 - Eliminate free textbooks at high school level.

2 - Establish a charge for use school facilities for non-stud activities, such as adult volleyb and basketball, aerobics, etc.

3 - Establish a tuition charge college credit courses offered at high school.

4 - Eliminate use of school buse transport athletes to games; dep on parents and booster groups provide transportation.

5 - Cut school system support public libraries and/or Extens Service.

6 - Cut back on administrat travel - no more than one tri month.

7 - Establish a system of fines students who don't take care their textbooks.

Denmar Property to Go to State

At 1 p. m. on Wednesday the Denmar property is scheduled to be transferred from its present owners, Dean-Callison Associates, to the State of West Virginia for use as a prison. The Department of Corrections has promised that the work to convert the former hospital facility for its new use will begin within a few days.

The final decision on the part of the Pocahontas Development Authority and the County Commission to spend the $495,000 price for the property came at a meeting in Charleston Tuesday. At the meeting, which was organized by State Senator Walt Helmick, county officials were given assurances by both Department of Corrections personnel and members of the Legislature that the prison project will be carried out.

The $495,000 is made up of $250,000 from the Development Authority and $245,000 from the Commission. Included in the Authority's share is $25,000 that had been donated to the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital for the new hospital facility but given back by the PMH Board to help with the prison project. The $250,000 from the Authority was originally the money from Dean-Callison to buy the Denmar property in 1991. The Commission's money is part of the Cranberry Wilderness Fund.

Reaching the agreement last week to purchase the property came only after about two weeks of disagreement which at one point seemed to put the project near to failure. The $495,000 price for the property is almost double what the Dean-Callison group paid for the property. The prison project also got entangled in the long standing conflict between the Development Authority and Commission President Norman Alderman.

Travelling to Charleston on Tuesday were Mr. Alderman, his fellow commissioners, Dana Moyers and Mike Mynuk, and Development Authority President Walt Weiford. The ski season is winding down, and Pocahontas Woods has come to town. The Pocahontas Woods display is now located in the offices of Pocahontas Realty, 819 Third Avenue in Marlinton, and will remain there through the spring months. It is hoped that the display, which features photographs and samples of the work of local woodworkers and furniture makers, will be presented in Cass this summer.

The Pocahontas Woods display in Marlinton is not a retail outlet, but rather an opportunity to show the quality of work local residents can do. All Pocahotnas County woodworkers are invited to submit one sample of their work for inclusion in the display. People wishing to make purchases will be referred to the craftsman himself. In addition to the pieces on permanent display, each week this spring Pocahontas Woods will feature the work of a particular craftsman, starting with furniture maker John Friel. Outstanding samples of John's work will be on exhibit the week of March 13 through the 20th.

This past winter the display was located at the Village Ski Shop on Linwood Road, managed by Richard Malcomb. Wanda Mullens, who operated a craft shop in the building, graciously agreed to include the Pocahontas woods display in her area, and did an excellent job representing the woodworkers. Many local wood crafters will have items for sale in Wanda's shop at the Cass Railroad, the Country Craft Junction, which will open the first weekend in May. Dean Jones and Randy Stemple, of Pocahontas Realty, both strong supporters of the Pocahontas Woods concept, will be hosting the display this spring in Marlinton. For information on the Pocahontas Woods display, call Dean or Randy at 799-6800 or Gibbs Kinderman at 799-6004.

and Delegate Bill Proudfoot. Delegate Joe Martin was not able to attend due to another commitment but called. About 15 other senators, including J. D. Brackenrich, of Greenbrier County, came by to indicate their support for the project. To do the necessary renovations and operate the prison for its first year will require a $2,000,000 appropriation by the Legislature.

Coming to Pocahontas County on Wednesday to complete the legal action for the land transfer are Ms. Huck and Ms. Stuart.

Progress For Pocahontas

Progress For Pocahontas, Inc., the private, non-profit organization established in December by members of the Pocahontas Development Authority, last week voted to place $225,000 in the special account set up for the purchase of the Denmar property and to transfer to the Development Authority the funds remaining in its bank account.

Progress for Pocahontas was started because members of the Development Authority feared that Commissioner Norman Alderman's threat to abolish the Authority endangered the possibility of getting a new job-creating project into Denmar. Earlier in 1992 the County Commission had turned over the $250,000 received from the Denmar sale to the Authority with the charge to use the funds to promote economic development in the county, with a particular emphasis on the Hillsboro area. In addition, the terms of the transfer of Denmar from the State to the County carried with it a "gentleman's agreement" to use 10% of any profit from the sale to help meet health care needs in the county.

Political rhetoric flying around the county after the fall election - statements that the Development Authority would be abolished in January and that the Denmar purchase money would be used for the county after the fall election - statements that the Development Authority would be abolished in January and that the Denmar purchase money would be used for the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital building project - led Development Authority members reluctantly to conclude that action was needed to protect the Denmar funds in order to keep alive the possibility of helping with a jobs-creation project for the Hillsboro area.

Therefore, in December all the members of the Development Authority agreed to set up a private, non-profit group in order to insulate the Denmar funds from political maneuvering. At that time the Authority voted to donate $25,000 to the PMH building project - the 10% of Denmar sale proceeds which was to be used for health care needs - and to transfer its remaining funds to Progress for Pocahontas.

Now that the new prison project for Denmar has come to pass, the remaining $225,000 from the Denmar sale has been placed into the special bank account set up to handle the repurchase. Since the County Commission has agreed not to abolish the Development Authority, the remainder of the funds - some $11,000 the Authority had before the Denmar sale - have been transferred back to that group.

Commissioner Alderman filed suit in December to block the transfer of funds from the Development Authority to Progress for Pocahontas. Judge Joliffe issued an order freezing the funds pending a hearing on the merits of the case. However, contrary to a report in the Charleston Gazette, a hearing was never held on the merits of the case, and the judge never ruled on the propriety of the transfer. An agreement between Commissioner Alderman, the Pocahontas Development Authority, and Progress for Pocahontas resulted in an order dropping the suit before the case was heard.

Although at the present time Progress for Pocahontas has no funds, the group intends to stay active working for economic development in the county. Members believe that the flexibility and insulation from politics available to a private, non-profit group can enable it to take on some useful tasks which would be difficult for a public body to handle. The group's officers are Walt Weiford, President; Ralph Beckwith, Vice-president; Mary Dell Joyner, Treasurer; Gibbs Kinderman, Secretary.

by Pam Pritt

The thirteen-year-old mystery of who killed "The Rainbow Girls" has now been solved, according to a Greenbrier County jury.

Ten men and two women brought in a conviction of murder in the first degree against Jacob Wilson Beard, 47, of Crescent City, Florida, in connection with the 1980 homicides of two young women traveling to the Rainbow Family Gathering in Webster County.

The jury recommended no mercy, which means Beard could spend the remainder of his life behind bars. Deliberation lasted for approximately six hours. Sentencing was set for July 16.

Beard was allowed to remain free on bond until the 16th by Circuit Judge Charles Lobban, who warned that there is to be "no threats or intimidation of any person who may have testified here, or any juror."

Beard is the first man to stand trial for the murders of Nancy Santomero, 19, of Huntington, Long Island, New York and Vicki Durian, 26, of Wellman, Iowa. The women were attending their first gathering and were not members of the Rainbow Family.

Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford said that he will now pursue the convictions of the other men indicted in the case, William McCoy, 37, Richard Fowler, 41, of Gordonsville, Virginia, and Arnold Cutlip, 55, of Lobelia. Another man indicted in January, Gerald Brown, 51, of Droop Mountain, died in late February, apparently of choking on food, authorities said.

Weiford said that he was obviously pleased by t he verdict, but was surprised at the judge's decision to allow Beard to remain free on bond.

"I am concerned about the safety of the jurors, witnesses and those associated with the case," Weiford said at a press conference immediately following the verdict.

"It was a tremendous challenge," the prosecutor commented about the case,"the product of a diligent investigation."

Weiford would not comment about allegations of police misconduct in connection with the investigation, except to say that he was not privy to the ongoing internal investigation by the West Virginia State Police.

Chief Investigative Officer Sgt. Robert Alkire, who has worked on the investigation since 1980, said that he did not have any problems with the techniques that the State Police used, but said that the investigation was aided by the people who came forward with information.

"I am very proud of the citizens of Pocahontas County for the courage they showed in standing up for what is right. They need to be commended," Alkire commented later.

"The man who put it all together was Walt Weiford," Alkire said,"People should know that. I've never seen a prosecutor like him in twenty years of police work."

Both the Santomero and Durian families said they were grateful at

"The man who put it all together was Walt Weiford," Alkire said,"People should know that. I've never seen a prosecutor like him in twenty years of police work."

Both the Santomero and Durian families said they were grateful at the outcome of the three week trial.

"My prayers for justice, not revenge, were answered," said Jeanne Santomero later,"No one should murder other people's children and not be held accountable. Neither my daughter Nancy nor her friend Vicki deserved such a violent end."

"I thank the people of West Virginia for their sympathy and concern. My family and I are also indebted to the members of the Rainbow Family for their relentless pursuit for truth and justice. I offer my gratitude to Walt Weiford, Sgt. Alkire and Jerry Dale," Santomero said.

Mary Coffman, the younger sister of Vicki Durian, said she felt overwhelmed by the verdict.

"When I saw her last she was holding my newborn son," Coffman said. "She said she wanted to come back home and settle down."

"I think now I can put it to rest, as much as it can ever rest," she continued,"I feel better knowing what happened. We deserve to know who took them away from us, but it won't bring them back."

Both families were represented at the trial during its first two weeks, but were unable to travel to West Virginia to hear the verdict.

Defense counsel for Beard said that they would pursue an appeal to overturn the jury's decision.

"We are obviously disappointed at the verdict. It was contrary to the evidence," said Stephen Farmer, "We'll pursue an appeal to protect Mr. Beard's rights and get to the truth.

Farmer said that Beard is "devastated by the verdict and is resolute in his position that he didn't kill anybody."

"The evidence presented raised more questions about the Rainbow killings than it answered," Farmer said, "but they (the jury) believed the state's case."

Farmer said that the warning by the judge regarding threats and intimidation was routine to defendants out on bond.

Wednesday, Beard took the stand in his own defense, beginning and ending his testimony by answering his attorney's questions.

"Did you kill these girls?" Defense attorney Bob Allen asked.

"No, sir. Absolutely not," Beard answered.

"Were you present when they were killed?"

"No, sir."

"Do you know who killed them?

"No, sir."

Beard recounted his activities on the evening of June 25, 1980 and offered as one piece of evidence a counter receipt from J & K Market.

Beard said that he was at work until after 4:00 p.m. when he recieved a telephone call from his wife. She wanted to know if he would be home in time to attend a Board of Education meeting later that evening. Beard said

Beard said that he was at work until after 4:00 p.m. when he recieved a telephone call from his wife. She wanted to know if he would be home in time to attend a Board of Education meeting later that evening, Beard said.

Beard said he left Greenbrier Tractor Sales, traveled to Hillsboro to pick up some groceries and went home. He said he ate a sandwich and made arrangements with his mother to care for his young daughter, then left with his wife to attend the meeting in Marlinton, arriving around 7:15 p.m.

Beard testified that he usually did the grocery shopping at the Hillsboro market, due to his wife's work schedule, but said that both of them had charging privileges there. The receipt did not indicate which Beard made the purchase on June 25, 1980.

He said that he did not regularly attend Board of Education meetings, but had attended this one to support preserving the Hillsboro Elementary School. He said that although he was loud, he was not drinking when he went to the meeting.

Beard said that his time card showed a hand-written time of 5:15 p.m., possibly because he had made a delivery for his company that evening. The time card, which was entered as evidence, shows service calls for the following two days.

But Beard did say he had a "vague recollection" of seeing Christine Cook's car parked at Lover's Lane on the north side of Droop Mountain. He testified that he recalled seeing Cook, Bill McCoy, Buddy Adkison and two females he did not recognize.

Beard was questioned at length by his attorney about his relationships with the other defendants.

Beard testified that he knew Brown and Cutlip only as business associates. Brown, he said, hauled locust posts for him and he had done some mechanic work on Brown's truck in exchange for some of Brown's own work. Beard testified that he was at Brown's home only twice, both times to settle accounts between the two. He testified that Cutlip had worked cutting locust posts on his farm and that he did not know the man before the summer of 1980, nor did he know where Cutlip lived at the time.

Beard said he had known Brown for several years and knew him well enough to "stop and chat."

The defendant said that he knew Bill McCoy when he saw him because he knew with whom the co-defendant associated. He said he knew McCoy's father and where the McCoy family lived on Jacox road.

According to Beard's testimony, he did not know Richard Fowler at all and was not associated with anyone who knew Fowler.

He said that he did not know Winters Charles Walton, the eyewitness who said he saw Beard with a gun when the girls were shot, and had never seen him until the preliminary motion hearings in Marlinton held in mid-April. As to the other eyewitness, Johnny Lewis, Beard said that he "couldn't put the face with the name," but had some memory of the older man.

Beard countered the testimony of state's witnesses who said they saw his red truck at the Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park, by testifying that when he purchased his truck earlier that year, it was two-tone, silver and red.

Beard said that after an accident at Greenbrier Tractor Sales, he had his truck repainted solid red sometime in late July of 1980.

Under cross-examination by Weiford, Beard said that no record existed for the date the truck was repainted.

Beard said that police first questioned him in connection with the murders in August of 1982 when then-Deputy Sheriff Bill Hall informed him police wanted him for questioning.

Budget Signed
Denmar Included

Governor Gaston Caperton signed the 1993-94 state budget into law on Wednesday. Included in the budget is $2 million for the renovation of the former Denmar Hospital into a prison.

(The AP news story on the budget refers to the money being used for the purchase and renovation of the old hospital. Purchase is, of course, not required since the state already owns the property. It was purchased from its private owners by the County Commission and donated to the Department of Corrections.)

Murder Trial

explaining why he had called one of the victim's homes.

He said that he had called Howard Durian after reading an anniversary article recounting the murders and the mystery surrounding the identity of the killer.

"I told him I'd rather not give my name, but I expressed my compassion and sorrow that the girls had died in West Virginia," Beard testified, "I told him I felt the police weren't doing their job and possibly weren't capable of doing the job in chasing down their killers."

Beard said he didn't give his name because he "lived in the area and didn't want to get involved with the police."

He testified that he distinctly remembered making one call, but did not remember making a second call the following day.

Beard said that he recounted to police in 1982 an incident involving two members of the Rainbow Family as they departed the area.

He said he was called by local citizens to haul a burned van to Chestnut Flats for a fee.

The counter-culture pair told him that the "scuttlebutt in the Rainbow Family was that local people had done the killing," he said.

Beard testified that he later told police about possible suspect vehicles and received pictures of the two women to show people and was instructed to gauge their reactions. He said that he had the black and white glossy 5x7 photos for a three-month period before returning them to Alkire.

The defendant said that he showed the pictures to several people in the area and that Bobby Lee Morrison, who worked for him at the time, may have seen the pictures in his glove compartment. Beard said that Morrison's testimony that he had threatened the younger man and shown him pictures of the girls was not true.

Beard claimed that he was never alone in a truck with Morrison.

According to another witness, Beard was not drinking at the Board of Education meeting.

Roger Pritt, of Droop Mountain, said that he sat near Beard at the meeting and had taken him home when Beard's wife had to leave early due to her work schedule. Pritt said that he remembered Beard being loud and argumentative, but also recalled others that had been likewise.

Pritt could not say whether Beard was already at the meeting when he arrived, but said that Beard was "at the door when we went in around 8:00 p.m."

He testified that Beard was not drinking that evening.

A computer graphics expert testified on the trajectory of the bullets based on the entry and exit wounds in the women's bodies and the West Virginia medical examiner's report.

Former attorney, Bryan Harston, now president of Jurilink International Corporation, said that his graphic re-creations were accurate within "thousandths of a millimeter."

them to Alkire.

The defendant said that he showed the pictures to several people in the area and that Bobby Lee Morrison, who worked for him at the time, may have seen the pictures in his glove compartment. Beard said that Morrison's testimony that he had threatened the younger man and shown him pictures of the girls was not true.

Beard claimed that he was never alone in a truck with Morrison.

According to another witness, Beard was not drinking at the Board of Education meeting.

The three-dimensional graphics showed the angles of the bullet wounds assuming a common source and a common location of a shooter, Harston said.

The study produced the possible elevation of the weapon from the wound, he testified, using the post-mortem reports and photographs and the 1983 statement of Bobby Lee Morrison. Harston said that he did not rely on the investigative report to come to his conclusions.

Jurilink's fee for Harston's production in court Wednesday was $3,000-5000, plus the daily fee for testifying which was $500 plus expenses, Harston said.

He said that this is Jurilink's first demonstration of bullet wounds to the body.

Closing arguments presented Thursday were observed by many courtroom spectators as one of the most significat moments in the lengthy trial.

The style of Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford, whose relaxed, matter-of-fact statements were delivered in increasingly hushed tones was compared to defense attorney Stephen Farmer, who delivered his arguments in seeming frustration and increasing fervor.

Weiford outlined his case from the evidence in testimony, requesting that the jury "assess the credibility of the witnesses."

Weiford asked the jury to remember that five witnesses placed Beard on Droop Mountain and two had specifically recalled that he was at the scene of the murder. Only Beard, "who has the ultimate interest in the outcome of the case, when you assess his credibility" could account for his own whereabouts, Weiford stated.

He said that he knew the credibility of some of the state's witnesses was in question by defense counsel.

"The State of West Virginia can't pick and choose witnesses,"

Weiford asked the jury to remember that five witnesses placed Beard on Droop Mountain and two had specifically recalled that he was at the scene of the murder. Only Beard, "who has the ultimate interest in the outcome of the case, when you assess his credibility" could account for his own whereabouts, Weiford stated.

He said that he knew the credibility of some of the state's witnesses was in question by defense counsel.

"The State of West Virginia can't pick and choose witnesses," Weiford commented, "You don't find people who have knowledge of murders at a Sunday School picnic."

The prosecutor moved on to the testimonies of the two purported eyewitnesses in the case, reminding the jury of how difficult it was for each man to testify in a court of law.

Weiford acknowledged that there were some details that Winters Charles Walton could not remember, but said, "he knows he was there and tried hard to remember what he could."

He remarked that Johnny Lewis had pointed to Beard from the witness stand as the man he'd seen shoot the girls.

"He came ready to tell the truth," Weiford said, "and the defense attorney couldn't talk him out of it."

Farmer requested that the jury discount both testimonies based on Walton's continuing drinking habits and Lewis' suggestibility.

Farmer claimed that both witnesses would "have to go home" where the "law was the law" and had testified accordingly to make their future lives simpler.

The defense attorney said that both witnesses had been abused and intimidated by a state police officer and that had spurred the witnesses to "say what the state wanted to hear."

Farmer further implied that Liz Johndrow's testimony in court was a product of coercion with Alkire and the influence of the Rainbow Family members attending the trial that day.

He said that in 1980, Johndrow's statement to police, the press and others was that she had parted company with Santomero and Durian on June 25, 1980 and had made the same statement to him only days before her testimony.

Farmer said that the day she spent in Lewisburg before testifying allowed her to be informed of the state's evidence in the case which relied on the women parting the day prior to the killing.

Farmer went on to say that Walton also had suffered from a lapse of memory about whether he had been introduced to the evidence or had supplied it himself. Then after the mid-afternoon recess, Walton came back and was confident that he had made the statement to police, Farmer stated.

"We have done everything we could, over the last eleven days to take you on a search of the truth," Farmer said. His client, he stated firmly, was telling the jury "the truth as best he knows it."

Farmer frequently pointed to Alkire, who was seated on the front row of the audience while offering his summation and looked down upon Weiford, seated immediately to his right, with scornful glares.

Weiford's rebuttal remarks were brief in content, but powerful in nature.

He said he felt that he, along with the investigating officers, had been accused of some type of wrongdoing during Farmer's closing argument.

"It seems that Mr. Farmer wants to put the State of West Virginia on trial here," Weiford said, "It saddens me that the state has been accused of certain things and you have been asked to believe things about me that I think attack my character as an attorney. I've never had that happen to me in any courtroom I've ever been in before."

Weiford said that it wasn't his duty to make the State Police look good and that if one of the investigating officers had mistreated witnesses, then he felt the jury should know about the situation. He said he had no reason to disbelieve any testimony given by Walton, including that of alleged police mistreatment.

Walton is the one, who since the time of his first statement , had pushed himself to remember the details of the murders, Weiford said.

"There are some things he can't remember," Weiford continued, "but he knows he was there."

Walton admitted in court that he was drinking liquor and smokng marijuana the evening of the murders and that after the shooting he was in and out of consciousness frequently—a combination which made him wonder in the days following the murders if he had seen what happened or if the whole situation was a dream.

Lewis, Weiford said, was a suggestible individual, but was himself a victim of being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

"Johnny Lewis was in a place he didn't want to be. He saw things he wishes he hadn't seen," Weiford said.

"If the state wanted to invent a witness for you, the state might have invented somebody that had an easier time than Johnny Lewis had," Weiford said, "It was sheer torture for Johnny to testify, but he told you the truth."

Weiford asked the jury whether they would believe Beard and his relatives or the testimonies of "persons who have no reason to lie."

"We have brought the Rainbow murderer to this jury. It is now time for this jury to decide if he will pay for what he did or will you set him free?" was Weiford's final comment to the jury before they began their deliberations.

Weiford was appointed special prosecutor in the case after losing a re-election bid last fall.

Beard was represented by two attorneys from King, Betts and Allen, reportedly one of the most expensive law firms in the state.

Report to Pocahontas County Citizens

This week I want to review some of the issues currently facing our new Commission, but first I must make a public appeal to our new Commissioner, Mike Mynuk. During the first meeting we elected Mr. Alderman, President of the Commission, which I feel is the right thing to do, based on tradition and the fact that Norman has expressed dissatisfaction with the leadership of our body for the past four years. Perhaps now he can lead us away from controversy and toward progress.

But, one thing bothered me at this first meeting. Mr. Mynuk repeatedly told me before and after his election that he was a man of independent views—that he was anything but the puppet of Mr. Alderman. This accusation that he might be a rubber stamp for Norman reached Mike, and he wanted to reassure me and others that this would not happen if we would trust and vote for him.

Not surprisingly, Norman celebrated the new year by presenting many well-thought-out resolutions. Midway through the questioned him about certain details. Mike seemed to grope for answers.

At that point, Norman intervened on Mike's behalf, explaining in detail that which had left Mike speechless. I wondered, "Did Norman write these documents for Mike?" So, I interrupted Norman's interpretation of Mike's documents and asked: "Did you write these for Mike, Norman?"

Norman unhesitatingly answered, "Yes."

I recount this incident to make this point to you, Mike: The election is over. You have a six-year term. Your supporters want you to represent your own views, to be your own man. Naturally, you and Norman will often agree. Sometimes, I hope, you and I will agree. And, my greatest hope, is that sometimes the three of us will be in accord.

But Mike, the people do NOT want you to be someone else's political shadow!

Moving on, the challenge facing the Northern District in the near future is to do three things that relate to the $250,000 grant from the Commission. They are:

1. Identify their health care needs

2. Place these needs into proper priority

3. Agree on this plan

The task sounds simple enough, but anyone experienced in decision making or the affairs of Pocahontas County will tell you this is a real challenge. Anyone should be able to identify needs that are currently not being met. Prioritizing these will be more difficult. Compromise and a willingness to submit to the needs of the majority will be somewhat painful. However, I've learned one thing about our county: we don't agree on any plan very well.

I hope we can begin this process understanding that we have a chance to do something positive for our quality of life today, and for the future livability of our Northern District as well. In my opinion, we need to: 1) listen carefully to the citizens whose needs must be met 2) gather advice from health-care experts and providers 3) understand the limits of this offer.

The sum of $250,000 will make a tremendous dent in our needs for facilities development, personnel needs, and related training. But money alone will not overcome all of our health-care delivery shortcomings.

Also, I would like to apologize to Bill McNeel and the Board of Education. I have come to understand that outbursts of anger—by any member—have not been directed from one towards any other, as I contended in my previous letter.

Anyone who lives along the Greenbrier River certainly needs to have flood insurance. Evidently, the problem is that some people who live along the Greenbrier don't like some of the rules that go along with the Flood Ordinance. I for one, don't mind following the rules as long as I can get my insurance, and I'm sure most of the landowners feel the same way. You would think that if we had another flood like we did in 1985, it would be better to have insurance and get our money and rebuild somewhere else, than not have insurance and not have any money to rebuild again on the same lot.

I would love for someone to tell me why letting us have flood insurance is such a high priority subject. Why do the people who don't live near the Greenbrier River not want us to have our insurance?

My husband and I want to add on to our home this year, but if they take our insurance away we won't. In fact, if they take our insurance away, we might as well put a "FOR SALE" sign in the yard.

I hope all the people who live along the Greenbrier River fill out the Flood Plain Questionnaire and send it to the County Commission and try to attend one of the meetings they have planned so we can let them know that we want to keep our flood insurance forever.

Denmar Project

State Senator Walt Helmick called Wednesday morning with cautious optimism that things are still on track on the Denmar prison project. As reported below he not so sanguine Tuesday afternoon.

At the end of the County Commission meeting on Tuesday the fate of the project to convert the Denmar property into a state prison was in doubt due to inaction by the County Commission and an action by Commission President Norman Alderman.

The action by Mr. Alderman was to take his concern about the price that needs to be paid for the property to the Charleston Daily Mail. In a front page story in Tuesday's edition of the Mail Mr. Alderman expressed his intention of not paying the $495,000 being asked by Dean-Callison Associates and taking the property by having the Commission use its power of eminent domain. In the article Mr. Alderman claimed that Walt Weiford, President of the Pocahontas Development Authority, was without authority from the PDA when he (Mr. Weiford) obtained an option on the Denmar property last week for $1,000.

Weiford, President of the Pocahontas Development Authority, was without authority from the PDA when he (Mr. Weiford) obtained an option on the Denmar property last week for $1,000.

State Senator Walt Helmick spoke to Commissioner Dana Moyers by phone at Tuesday's Commission meeting and said the article in the paper has caused the Governor's office to wonder what is going on in this county in regards to support for the prison project. At the public meeting on Monday night at Hillsboro, Mr. Helmick had stressed the need for the county to work together in order for the project to come to Denmar. Mr. Helmick also expressed to Mr. Moyers his own disgust and thinking that he may give up on the project.

This phone call from Mr. Helmick brought the meeting to an end, without completing all the Commission needed to do to see the county obtain the Denmar property.

During the meeting the Commissioners did vote 3-0 to commit $125,000 to the purchase of the property. They also approved, at Mr. Alderman's request, a motion designating the Commission as the exclusive agency to handle the Denmar property transfer from Dean-Callison to the Department of

During the meeting the Commissioners did vote 3-0 to commit $125,000 to the purchase of the property. They also approved, at Mr. Alderman's request, a motion designating the Commission as the exclusive agency to handle the Denmar property transfer from Dean-Callison to the Department of Corrections. This motion by Mr. Alderman's followed his remark that "I don't trust the Development Authority."

The major failure of the meeting was failure to pass a resolution that would release the $225,000 now in the hands of Progress for Pocahontas for use in the purchase of the Denmar property. (PFP is a non-profit group organized by members of the Development Authority in response to Mr. Alderman's pledge to eliminate the Authority.) The money is presently tied up by a lawsuit filed by Mr. Alderman.

Mr. Moyers proposed a motion calling for:

—the lawsuit to be dropped

—the funds be transferred to a new account requiring two signatures, one from the Development Authority and one from the Commission

—the funds are to be used towards the Denmar purchase only once the prison project is assured.

Mr. Alderman agreed verbally to this proposal but said he wanted the wording prepared by Prosecuting Attorney David Arrington. Mr.

Mr. Alderman agreed verbally to this proposal but said he wanted the wording prepared by Prosecuting Attorney David Arrington. Mr. Arrington was not able to do this by the end of the meeting and Mr. Alderman refused to vote on the motion without having it in written form.

The question of when any money the Commission would contribute towards the $495,000 cost of the land was raised several times during the meeting. Commissioner Mike Mynuk stressed several times during the meeting that the Commission's $250,000 contribution to the hospital project not be touched.

This left only the other $250,000 in the Cranberry Fund, which the Commission committed to the health care needs of the upper part of the county. Hillsboro Meeting on Denmar

About two hundred people gathered in the Hillsboro gym Monday night to hear about the Denmar project from Senator Walt Helmick and County Commissioners Norman Alderman, Dana Moyers and Mike Mynuk

Senator Walt Helmick led off with a summary of events and description of the proposed minimum/medium security prison at the former Denmar Hospital. In 1986 there was discussion of a prison at Denmar but the hospital was going pretty strong so that was dropped. Then the hospital was closed because it cost over twice as much to keep a patient there as in a private nursing home and the state was struggling under medical costs. The state gave the property to Pocahontas County. The private prison was proposed and that didn't work out. Now the Governor has approved a proposal for a minimum/medium security prison facility at Denmar, 150 to 300 beds. He stated the 300 would be best for employment, of course.

He explained that every county has jail overflow problems. This facility would be an economical benefit for the state and hopefully good for the county—a prison isn't the best but is the only thing likely right now and he hopes it will work out all right.

The plan is to renovate the inside, cost $300,000, fence the hospital property, 5,150 feet, with 12 ft. fencing, $128,000. There is no fence at Huttonsville but there will be at Denmar.

There will be about 75 offered $365,000 but the owners felt they could not come down from $495,000. Mr. Cain said they had $250,000 from the EDA and $125,000 from the County Commission. The negotiators were willing to recommend paying the full amount if necessary. Senator Helmick said they then went to the Hospital Board and to Comvest, which is handling the finances, and they feel the project is so important to the new hospital being able to pay for itself that $125,000 to $150,000 could be handled with the financial package.

Norman Alderman said he favored a dual approach—he is prepared to go all the way but he believes in negotiation and also he wants to consider condemnation.

Mr. Helmick said he had talked with the Circuit Judge, who said the county cannot condemn for the state. The state can but they will not. Also it would take time.

Mr. Moyers said he is behind this solidly, it is critical now, even his commitment to the Northern District health needs can wait for this. This project is essential for employment, for the Hillsboro water system, the hospital, and schools. He hopes we will not split apart because when we do we lose, and he doesn't think we will have another opportunity like this.

Mr. Mynuk said he is sure the disagreements can be ironed out and that they will reach a proper settlement.

The three assured the people that they will hold to their commitment to $125,000.

There will be about 75 employees. A few jobs will be contracted, such as psychiatric care to Seneca Mental Health. Medical services will be $425,000 to $500,000, to be served by Pocahontas Memorial Hospital. If there are 300 inmates, there will be four nurses extra. Utilities are budgeted at $135,000, office costs and telephone, $10,000, psychiatric services $65,000.

There will be 36 correctional officers, receiving the same pay as Huttonsville and Moundsville.

The immediate plan is to relieve the overflow in jails for possibly five years, then develop a boot camp, a military-type camp for youthful offenders with a rigid program of strict discipline and work training.

The 1993-94 budget now before this session of the Legislature calls for $2,000,000 for Denmar and as far as the State is concerned it will stay in the budget—it's a "done deal." Our part is to give a deed for the property from the Economic Development Authority or County Commission to the State and so it has to be purchased from the private owners. All 188 acres need to be returned to the state.

Senator Helmick said he wants no quarreling, no division, to hurt our case.

Many other places want this project. It was 5:30 the evening of Many other places want this project. It was 5:30 the evening of the Governor's State of the State speech before the decision was made to come to Denmar rather than Sweet Springs.

The State would like to open it about July 1.

The facility, with 66 positions—a conservative estimate—would have a payroll of $1,071,816, plus 40% benefits, total $1,590,542. Employees will include a warden, assistant, business administrator, office workers, guards, cooks, maintenance people, nurses, and possibly teachers.

Benefits might include Pocahontas using this as a regional jail rather than having to travel many miles to another facility for transporting prisoners and hearings, etc.

The asking price for the property from Dean-Callison Associates is $495,000.

Several comments were made at the first that the price was excessive but by the end of the discussion the sentiment of the group was that the project was so important to the area that the purchase should be made at once and not risk losing it.

Testing of the soil was contracted but as of Friday the mounds of soil had not been picked up.

The meeting ended abruptly after the call from Senator Helmick with no plan to meet quickly if need be to finalize financing for the Denmar purchase.

Denmar On Track For Prison

A sense of cooperation pervaded the Pocahontas County Courthouse Monday night as the County Commission took steps to see that Denmar will be purchased and turned over to the state to be used as a prison.

Funds totalling as much as $500,000 from three groups will go into a special account at the First National Bank to buy the Denmar building and property from Dean Callison Associates, Inc. That group is asking $495,000 for Denmar.

Earlier in the day at a meeting of the board of Progress For Pocahontas (PFP) in the office of its president, attorney Walt Weiford, that group voted to give $225,000 of its money toward the purchase. PFP is a private, non-profit corporation formed by 14 members of the Pocahontas Development Authority (PDA) in December as a way of protecting PDA funds should that group be dissolved by the County Commission.

Alderman's lawsuit under the same guidelines as his dismissal order and appropriating $250,000 left in the Cranberry Wilderness Fund for the Denmar purchase.

Laverne McCoy, representing the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital Board, told those assembled that the board would give back up to $25,000 earlier donated to it by the PDA for the Denmar purchase.

Two signatures will be required to spend the money in the special Denmar account, one from a member of the County Commission and one from a member of the PDA. Mike Mynuk was approved by the Commission as its signatory.

Mynuk said he was ready to take the necessary papers to Charleston as soon as possible; he said he hoped to go as early as Tuesday. Walt Weiford pointed out that spending Cranberry money would require approval by the State Tax Commissioner and that could delay the transaction a day or so, but no one in the courtroom seemed to care about a day's delay. Heavy applause greeted the Commission's actions.

Ralph Beckwith, apparently echoing the sentiments of most present, congratulated the Commission and said that he hoped this was a new beginning for the county.

The Reader Spea

Dear Editor,

I missed the Pocahontas Times usual detailed and consecutive report on the County Commission meeting, last week. I heard more details of that meeting over the radio than I found in the paper.

Was Mr. McNeel's angry editorial really more important to our citizens than detailed and complete reporting from which they might form their own opinons?

I'm very glad that the Times provides a forum for all of our strong and sincere opinions, and grateful to the editors for that policy. I'd like to suggest that they should all be kept together, on the 'Letters' page, carefully separate from the impartial news that we all rely on. Editors, county commissioners, state senators, and I are all citizens alike, and our opinions, though perhaps worthy of a hearing, should not be confused with nor presented as news.

Finally, I'd like to commend Commissioner Alderman for his resistance to paying the extortionate price being asked for Denmar by the Dean-Callison group. They were allowed to buy the property privately, as I recall, substantially because of their assurances that they wished to do so for the good of the county.

Do we wish, as a society, to begin making a habit of sacrificing principle and justice, for political Together they have made it possible for an unbelievable schedule of events on Saturday October 2.

The day will start with guided tours hosted by none other than Jelly Bean the clown. You will be able to see the erection of the giant circus big top. Also, Franzen's over 70 circus animals will be on display all day long for the young and old alike. Many times a local business might find a four-legged pachyderm in their parking lot giving free elephant rides to all the kids.

One hour before showtime the smell of hot buttered popcorn and cotton candy will fill the air. The midway opens with pony rides, more elephant rides, and one might take a trip through the Franzen Petting Zoo.

All this excitement will be topped off with a 90-minute performance, one at 1 p.m. and the second show at 3:30 p.m. Performing will be lions, tigers, elephants, horses, jugglers, acrobats, clowns, and more. This is a wonderful family event you won't want to miss!

Trials Set for Rainbow Defendants

Four of the five men indicted in the Rainbow murder case have appeared in court for arraignment and had trial dates set.

Jacob W. Beard, Arnold Cutlip and Richard H. Fowler were before Judge Frank Jolliffe on Thursday of last week. Gerald Brown was in court on Monday. All entered pleas of not guilty and each was released on $100,000 bond.

The first trial will be for Beard on March 23. The trials for the other three are set in May—Cutlip on the 4th, Fowler the 18th, and Brown the 25th.

The fifth man indicted, William O. McCoy, is in prison in Nevada and plans for his return have not been finalized yet.

The five men were each indicted on two counts of murder and two counts of conspiracy to abduct with intent to defile in the deaths of Nancy Santomero and Victoria Durian. The bodies of the two young women were found on June 25, 1980, on the road to Briery Knob.

magistrate would be available before morning. In the morning I had to wait from 9:00 until 10:30 before officer Troy McCoy was available to escort me from the jail to the magistrate's office. Why? When the County pays for the services of two magistrates, why are they not available at all hours? And if they are not available at such hours, why was I arrested at such a peculiar and inconvenient time?

This all makes an interesting and amusing story with grown men acting like kids. The charges against me carry a maximum penalty of $700 and one year in jail. I hire a lawyer, that will cost me $500. If the jury decides completely in my favor, the experience will still have cost me $500, the humiliation of a night in jail, and a 'lost day's work. Don't you think that's funny? Just remember, it could happen to you.

Dear Editor,

During his recent appearance on WVMR's "Commissioner's Corner" program, Norman Alderman asked that the people of Pocahontas County consider the possibility of converting from the present three member County Commission to a five member commission. Under Alderman's suggestion, each of the five commissioners would receive 60% of what a member of a three person commission would be paid. Thus there would be no additional cost to the taxpayer.

Commissioner Alderman put forth two main reasons for suggesting this idea. First, his experience over the last four years has led him to believe that in a three member body the tendency is for one member to become the "odd man out", and for inflexible two against one splits to become the norm. With a five member body there would be more likelihood of shifting alliances developing according to the merits of the particular issue being discussed, and the emergence of a more business-like atmosphere. Second, a five member commission would get more people involved in local government and allow more communities to have their own representative.

Times Editor Bill McNeel made a similar suggestion in an editorial last fall. If I recall correctly, McNeel proposed a five member

THINK ABOUT IT .....

We have a growing tourist and recreation industry WITHOUT CORRIDOR H

Tourist attractions and facilities are FULL TO CAPACITY . . . WITHOUT CORRIDOR H

We have several healthy industries . . . . WITHOUT CORRIDOR H

We have a quiet, high quality life that is the envy of our visitors.

SO WHAT IS CORRIDOR H FOR—

THIS IS A ROAD FOR DEVELOPERS FROM THE EAST !!!!!!!!! They have made a mess of their part of America and now they want Pocahontas County. The road will open us up to this:

NOT THE FEW JOBS WE NEED, BUT A FLOOD OF PEOPLE AND PROBLEMS

For every person here who needs a job, there are THOUSANDS WHO NEED WORK LIVING TO THE EAST. Do you want them here?

LOCAL BUSINESSES WILL NOT SURVIVE the money and skills of those who come in on the fast road.

Traditional industries with smokestacks and log trucks will not please the new folks . . . . THEY WILL BE CLOSED SOONER OR LATER.

Rapid development will push land values up UNTIL LOCAL FOLKS CAN'T AFFORD TO BUY LAND OR LIVE HERE.

The cost of roads and more roads, police, sewers, trash collection and other services will PUSH TAX RATES UP in spite of increased tax base.

TAX INCREASES FORCE LOCAL PEOPLE OFF THEIR LAND AND DEVELOPERS LOVE IT.

The farms and hills and towns will begin to look like a city suburb. You get the TRAFFIC, CRIME, POLLUTION, all the things that tourists leave their home to escape.

HUNTING? On developed land? Good luck!

FISHING? How many people do you want along the stream?

THERE ARE 40 MILLION PEOPLE WITHIN A FEW HOURS DRIVE. DO YOU WANT THEM TO GET HERE FASTER? THE DEVELOPERS DO.

There is much to lose. Except for developers, most Americans can tell you all about it. A HIGH QUALITY LIFE IS RARE TODAY.

CHANGE IS CERTAIN. Some jobs, a better economy for folks who live here . . . sure! But BUILD CORRIDOR H, AND NOTHING WILL SURVIVE THE FLOOD UNCHANGED. We could rebuild after the natural flood in 1985, but can never recover from the flood Corridor H will bring.

WE HAVE PROBLEMS BUT WE DON'T NEED MORE. There is no place like Pocahontas County. Let's not allow the developers to ruin it.

Dear Editor,

commission, with each member paid a couple of thousand dollars per year and the money saved used to hire someone to manage the day to day business of the county. This type of commission would function more like the present Board of Education, with policy making power vested in the Board and day to day administration handled by the Superintendent.

A State Constitutional amendment passed in 1974 permits counties to "reform", alter or modify the county commision". If 10% of the registered voters of a county sign a petition specifying a proposed change, the current County Commission is mandated to petition the Legislature to pass a law enabling the change, which goes into effect only if it is ratified by the voters of the county.

I agree with Mr. Alderman and Mr. McNeel that the five member commission idea merits serious discussion. Many questions will have to be addressed as citizens decide whether they like this concept and what form it should take. Here are just a few:

1 - Should the commissioners be elected at large, as they are now, or should they be elected from single member districts? Under the present setup, although no more than one commissioner can come from a given district, everyone in the county votes in all the commissioner races. Some feel this gives the Commissioners a broader vision, since they each must attend to concerns from all sections of the county. Others feel, however, that this at-large system tends to alienate people from their local government, maintaining that having a person in office who lives in your community and who owes his election to local votes would make people feel more involved and better represented. In recent years a commissioner was elected from the southern district although he lost the race in the lower end, and another was elected from the central district although the people of that district favored another candidate.

2 - Should the present conception of the Commissioner role, where the Commissioners are both legislators and administrators, be retained, or should the commission be a policy making body, with one person designated to handle the County's business between meetings? With five commissioners, each being paid 60% of what a member of a three person commission would make, would it be more difficult for any one member to spend the time necessary to get business done between meetings? On the other hand, even if the five commissioners were just paid something like $2,000 per year, would there be enough money left over to hire a manager? One idea might be to pay four of the Commissioners at a lower rate and the President at a higher rate,with the expectation that he or she would devote considerably more time to the job.

Mr. and Mrs. Pocahotnas County, what do you think about the "five member commission" idea? Have you asked your neighbor what he thinks about it? If you have an opinion, have you told your Commissioner? If you have a suggestion as to how the concept could be improved, why not write a letter to the editor?

"I have always earned an 'honest living' and had to work for all I got. I guess it's the Scotch-Irish in me. I've taught school and obtained my Ph.D. while being a wife, mother and taking care of a home. But, I like to think that most of all . . . I've been a poet." — Louise McNeill Pease to student researcher Susan O'Dell Pomeroy on Nov. 13, 1982

Patty Vandergrift
SUNDAY GAZETTE-MAIL

LOUISE McNEILL PEASE, 74, wrote her first poem when she was a youngster growing up in Pocahontas County. Her most recent was written in mid-December. In the intervening years, she has written scores more, many of them celebrating her West Virginia heritage.

Pease was born on a farm near Marlinton in 1911. She earned a bachelor's degree from Concord College and began teaching in a one-room school when she was 19. At night, she wrote poetry. In 1931, her first book of poems, "Mountain White," was published.

"I wrote the book at night by the light of an oil lamp, after I taught at a country school during the day for $90 a month," Pease told one interviewer. "I wrote in bed because of the cold, with my brother's old bathrobe wrapped around me, and a Sears-Roebuck catalog on my knees as a table."

Since then her traditional rhymed verses have been published in a variety of national magazines including Atlantic Monthly, Harper's, Saturday Evening Post, Ladies Home Journal and Good Housekeeping.

Pease, who was named poet laureate of West Virginia in 1979, is the Sunday Gazette-Mail's West Virginian of the a wrenching thing for her to leave West Virginia. She has wonderful friends there.

"For a year or so, she hadn't been writing. We'd been encouraging her to start writing again and she's just written a new poem. We think that's great."

Editors and colleagues have praised Pease's work throughout her career. In a 1938 letter Saxe Commins of Random House wrote: "That your poems are written with great skill and a convincing fervor is apparent at a glance. Would that that were enough!"

Although Commins had to reject Pease's work because of earlier commitments to publish other books of poetry, he encouraged Pease to take her poems elsewhere.

"By all means, try another publisher who may be able to find a place for your distinguished poetry on his list."

The rejection letter is among the papers Pease donated to the state archives at the Cultural Center in August.

Also among the more than 50 years' worth of papers that trace Pease's literary career are complimentary letters from others who encouraged her writing.

"I have been impressed by your incisiveness of style and by your skillful restraint," wrote one magazine editor.

"The poems — and you may quote me — have the virtue of freshness, a spontaneity that is equally evident in the lyrics and the narratives. . . . There is warmth as well as wit in the lines," wrote Louis Untermeyer, whom Pease has called a "very kind, generous editor."

Fellow poet and longtime friend Archibald MacLeish wrote of one of Pease's works, "What I like in the book is the thing itself, the texture. Like a

To Pease, teaching was her career, and writing was her passion, said her son, Douglas.

She earned a master's degree at Miami University of Ohio, did post-graduate work at the University of Iowa and received her doctorate at West Virginia University.

She retired in 1973 after teaching in public schools in West Virginia and South Carolina and at Concord, Potomac State, WVU and Fairmont State College.

"My mom always loved teaching and considered it good to have something else besides her writing as a basic livelihood," Douglas Pease said.

Writing was its own reward; selling her work was a bonus, he added.

"She said she realized at a very early age that writing was something she really liked to do. There's something about the actual creative process itself that makes my mother feel good.

"I can remember my mom spending long periods of time, writing furiously with the large brush stroke letters. She would write poetry and also prose. Like with any other writer, a lot of things didn't work out. She tried for years to get a novel published, but that didn't work out."

One of her most famous works, "Gauley Mountain," is a symbolic history of West Virginia in poetry, published in 1939 by Harcourt Brace with an introduction by Stephen Vincent Benet.

"Men do extraordinary and colorful things. Miss McNeill hasn't stinted the color — she also hasn't stinted the truth. There are darns here and there in her tapestry and some of the individual poems are better than others. But all the same, there is a new poet in the land," Benet wrote.

In a 1979 newspaper interview, Pease explained her use of traditional rhyme.

"I came to maturity as a poet when traditional poetry was still acceptable. I stuck with it. Much of the contemporary poetry is esoteric, confusing and appeals to only a small group. That's why it's not Pease's son said his mother believes the boundaries imposed by rhyme add to the quality of her poems.

"Certain people believe there is something suspiciously stilted about a rhymed poem. Mother doesn't believe that at all. She thinks the constraint of having to rhyme the poem adds to the struggle.

"She says the poems take an unexpected turn that they would not take if she didn't have the constraints of rhyme. She feels the poetry is actually better since she works in those constraints."

Pease and her husband, Roger, also a teacher, left West Virginia after they retired in 1973 and moved to Connecticut, where their son lives.

After two-and-a-half years, "traffic and taxes ran us out," Pease said. "I guess I was homesick, too."

They returned to West Virginia and settled in Lewisburg where they lived until October.

Both are in ill health and moved back to Connecticut where they share a two-family home with their son, who teaches physics at the University of Connecticut, and his wife.

Pease's talents were first recognized by people outside the state, according to veteran West Virginia publisher Jim Comstock, who has been a Pease fan for years.

"She had attention outside West Virginia before she was ever discovered here."

One of the first recognitions Pease got in the state was in a special edition of Comstock's newspaper, The Hillbilly, he said.

Pease credited Comstock with reviving the printing of "Gauley Mountain." The printing plates were melted down for the war effort. "They asked me to buy them at the time for $50 but I didn't have the money so the book was out of print until 1972," Pease said in a 1979 interview.

"I believe Jim Comstock, editor of The Hillbilly, salvaged 'Gauley Mountain' from the realm of forgotten things," she said.

In 1977, Pease and Gov. Jay Rockefeller were named "Daughter and Son of the Year" by the West Virginia Society in Washington, D.C.

In the foreword to Pease's "Elderberry Flood" in 1979, Rockefeller wrote: "We flew to Washington together, and that flight marked the beginning of a lasting friendship.

Spirit of heritage depicted in poetry

"It is impossible to read Louise McNeill's works without appreciating her ability to detail how it was in those early days when West Virginia was an unsettled territory. She excels when she takes pen in hand and lets one share the emotions that sparked our travel on the road to statehood.

"She depicts so vividly the spirit of our West Virginia heritage, never missing a link in the long chain of events that constitutes our heritage."

While "Gauley Mountain" was essentially a symbolic work, the poems in "Elderberry Flood" trace the state's history using actual events, names and dates, she said. Published in 1979 by the state Department of Culture and History, the book is used as a supplemental text for West Virginia history courses.

Two years after their first meeting, Rockefeller named Pease the state's poet laureate. She is only the second person to serve in that capacity.

Rockefeller, Gov. Arch Moore and other political leaders recently nominated Pease for another honor — librarian consultant with the Library of Congress. Comstock, who organized the effort, said a decision is expected soon.

Other honors Pease has received during her career include the Atlantic Monthly Poetry Prize in 1938 and the annual Book Award of the West Virginia Library Association in 1977.

Pease noted the support and encouragement she received from Rockefeller, Comstock and others in the acknowledgements to "Elderberry Flood."

Among the others she thanked state legislator Jack Canfield.

Canfield was a student in Pease's history class at Potomac State College.

"She was a very thorough teacher with a depth of understanding of her subject and of her students. Also, she was the only teacher who threw me out of class," Canfield said.

"Two of us got the giggles because our stomachs were growling. She thought we were giggling at her lecture. I made up for it later when I presented her a bouquet of wilted dandelions as a peace offering. To this day, every time I see her, she reminds me of that bouquet."

He added, "She is such a lady with such class that many of us small-town kids never had been exposed to before. She has great dignity that follows her wherever she goes."

Pease has left to West Virginians a legacy of poems that celebrate her love for her home state. In "Elderberry Flood," she wrote:

Supreme Court Votes Not To Hear Suit

Last Wednesday the State Supreme Court voted 5-0 not to consider a suit against the Board of Education. The suit was filed by Chris Beverage, a senior at Pocahontas County High School, to prevent the school system from forcing him to take a course in parenting.

Under the present PCHS schedule, Driver Education and Parenting, each one semester courses, are scheduled the same periods. To take Driver Education, it is also necessary to take Parenting. In the suit Beverage listed several reasons for not wanting to take the parenting course. The Court was asked to remove the requirement that students who take Driver Education must also take Parenting.

Following the rejection by the Supreme Court, Beverage's attorney, Marilyn Thompson, filed a similar suit in Pocahontas County Circuit Court on Thursday.

A hearing on the suit was set for Tuesday afternoon before Judge Charles Lobban but was then continued to a later date at the request of Attorney Thompson.

Denmar

A meeting was held Tuesday between representatives of the Pocahontas County Development Authority and the owners of the Denmar property, Dean-Callison Associates, Inc., concerning the sale of the property to the county. If an agreement can be reached for the county to acquire the property, it will then be made available to the State Department of Corrections for conversion into a medium security prison.

The Department of Corrections is under court order to remove state prisoners from county jails and sees converting the existing Denmar facility into a prison as a fairly quick way to accomplish this goal. The Department is also interested in establishing a "boot camp" type correctional institution for youthfu!, first time offenders, and sees Denmar as a good location for such a facility.

The Department of Corrections has indicated that it will not purchase the property since the state donated it to the county in 1990. In 1991 the property was sold to the Dean-Callison group. The Development Authority and the County Commission are working together to obtain the property .

Although an agreement was not reached on Tuesday, it is hoped one can be worked out by the end of this week.

An update on the Opera House in Marlinton

By Phyllis Crickenberger

Since Pioneer Days with the doors of the Opera House open on Friday and Saturday, we have had great interest. The brochures were ready and over 900 given out.

Many friends of the Opera House have made donations towards the renovation of the Opera House.

We would like to express our appreciation to:

Mrs. Pat Browning, of Marlinton, who contributed in memory of her mother, Lois Wolfe Matchett.

Danny Wright, member of Fayette County Historical Landmarks Commission.

Mrs. Glenna Moore, Marlinton.

Richard and Susan Evans, Hillsboro.

Mrs. Pauline Shrader Morgan, of St. Albans.

John and Betty Jo Buly, Wilton, Connecticut.

Ann Price Hubard, in honor of her sisters, Jane Price Sharp and Florence Price McNeel.

Del Cohrs, of Odenton, Maryland (who has a camp near Marlinton), donated his winning prize money for the first place in "The Road Kill Cookoff."

Greg Griffin, of Washington, D. C.

Sending stories and memories of the Opera House are Mrs. Betty Pifer Eastwood, of Charleston, whose father, A. C. Pifer, occupied the Opera House from the middle 30's to the late fifties with the automobile agency named Pifer Motor Company; Mrs. Pauline Shrader Morgan also wrote of memories of the area of friends and family.

We love hearing from you! Please keep the contributions, memorial and honor donations coming. We love hearing the memories of the Opera House too. Let us hear from you, send to: Opera House, P. O. Box 125, Marlinton, WV 24954.

Mare Loses Life Struggle To Starvation; Quinwood Man Convicted Of Misdemeanor

BY TINA ALVEY

A Quinwood man was convicted on January 6 in Greenbrier County Magistrate Court of cruelty to animals, a misdemeanor.

A severely underweight chestnut mare was seized by humane officials at the Quinwood farm of Charles Omechinski early last week, courthouse records show. According to the complaint filed by Jerry Shaffer on behalf of the Greenbrier County Humane Society, the horse had no visible fat and weighed only 750 pounds. A horse of her type should weigh between 1,000 and 1,100 pounds, the complaint said.

The horse had to be humanely destroyed by a local veterinarian on Thursday after the animal failed to respond to treatment.

Magistrate Louis Longanacre sentenced Omechinski to 90 days in the county jail and ordered him to pay a $150 fine plus court costs. Omechinski is appealing the jail sentence to Circuit Court. He has requested probation in lieu of incarceration.

As a condition of his probation, Omechinski said he would agree to properly feed and care for all animals still in his possession, including 7 other horses and several dogs; to permit monitoring of his animals' conditions by the Humane Society; and to pay all veterinarian expenses incurred in the treatment of the horse that died.

Montie estimated the mare which had to be destroyed had not been fed properly for six to nine months before law enforcement officials were called in. The horse was allegedly left to forage for grass in a pasture.

Five Indicted in Rainbow Murders

The investigation into the murders of Nancy Santomero and Victoria Durian in this county in 1980 took a new turn in its torturous history last week with the Grand Jury indictment of five men for the killings.

The Pocahontas County Grand Jury met on Tuesday and Wednesday of last week to hear evidence in the case. Wednesday afternoon the Jury returned indictments against Jacob W. Beard, Gerald Brown, Arnold B. Cutlip, Richard H. Fowler, and William O. McCoy. All five are each indicted on two counts of first degree murder and two counts of conspiracy to abduct with intent to defile. These are five of the seven men that were charged with the crime in April of last year. The other two, Johnny W. Lewis and Winters C. Walton, have been granted immunity from prosecution in return for testimony about the case.

The bodies of the two young women were found on the Briery Knob Road on June 25, 1980. The case has been referred to as the Rainbow Murders because the two are believed to have been on their Presenting the case to the jury was Special Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford. Mr. Weiford, who was Prosecuting Attorney until the first of the year, was appointed as special prosecutor since the present Prosecuting Attorney, David Arrington, has a conflict in the case. He briefly represented Walton after he was charged last year.

Police officers leading the investigation are State Police First Sgt. R. R. Alkire and former Sheriff Jerry Dale. Mr. Weiford and Sgt. Alkire have been involved in the case since the beginning and Mr. Dale after he took office as sheriff in 1985. Mr. Weiford was a law student at the the time of the crime and working that summer in the office of then Prosecuting Attorney Steve Hunter.

When the seven men were charged with the murders last year Walton and Lewis provided much of the testimony in the preliminary hearings held in Magistrate Court for Beard, Brown, Cutlip, and Fowler. After allegations of improper activity by State Police officers in obtaining the statements from Lewis and Walton came to light in July, Mr. Weiford asked

After allegations of improper activity by State Police officers in obtaining the statements from Lewis and Walton came to light in July, Mr. Weiford asked that the charges be dismissed. (The allegations were not against local officers, but others assisting in the investigation.)

Following the dismissal of the charges, Sgt. Alkire and Sheriff Dale continued the investigation into the case.

Beard is presently living in Crescent City, Florida, and Fowler in Gordonsville, Virginia. McCoy at last report was in Las Vegas, Nevada, and Brown and Cutlip are in Pocahontas County.

The five men indicted are to appear in court on Thursday of this week for arraignment.

County Commission Meets With Development Authority

Following a joint meeting of the Pocahontas County Commission and the Pocahontas Development Authority (PDA) on Tuesday evening, there was a general feeling of cooperation among the members of both groups. Still, there was little concrete action taken during the two-hour meeting.

The meeting was called for two reasons according to Commissioner Dana Moyers: to heal any existing wounds and to see if there was common ground on which the two groups could stand and move forward.

Three groups are actually major players concerning public involvment in economic development in the county: the County Commission, the PDA and the private, non-profit group Progress For Pocahontas, Inc.

Progress For Pocahontas (PFP) was formed following Commissioner Norman Alderman's December threat to abolish the PDA. The PDA transferred all its assets to PFD, and all but one of the 15 members of the PDA became the members of PFP.

The PDA currently has no assets. PFP has about $236,000 which is frozen by a Circuit Court order pending the settlement of a lawsuit brought by Alderman and joined by the County Commission on a 2-1 vote on January 5. The lawsuit asks that all money transferred to PFP by the PDA be returned to the PDA.

During Tuesday's regular meeting, the County Commission voted 2-1 to increase the size of the PDA from 15 to 21. The Commission to the PDA should the Denmar deal go through.

Without saying what was agreed upon in the executive session, Commissioner Alderman said the PDA would have about $30,000 left at its disposal should everything work out.

Some PDA and PFP members suggested disbanding PFP and returning the money to the PDA should Commissioner Alderman take concrete action. Still, no formal action was taken regarding the lawsuit or the status of Progress For Pocahontas before the meeting adjourned. Hope was high, but many details and formalities must be worked through before Denmar is assured of being the site of a new state prison.

County Commission

The County Commission met for a regular meeting on Tuesday.

The Hotel/Motel Tax funds and the Development Authority were the main topics in one form or another throughout the day.

The Commission met with representatives of the various groups that receive the revenue from the Hotel/Motel Tax concerning the reduction in funds they will have due to the commitment of the Commission to provide $100,000 to the new hospital project this fiscal year. (The Commission is also obligated to consider additional $100,000 contributions in following fiscal years.)

The first 50% of the money goes to the Tourism Commission under the law and the other 50% is now divided between Parks and Recreation, Library Board, Landmarks Commission, Dramas,

During Tuesday's regular meeting, the County Commission voted 2-1 to increase the size of the PDA from 15 to 21. The Commission also appointed two of its own members, Alderman and Mike Mynuk, to fill two of the six new spots. It also voted to appoint Jerry Heinemann to one of the spots. As of Tuesday evening's meeting, the membership of the PDA stood at 18, with three unfilled slots.

When asked Tuesday evening why he appointed Heinemann to the PDA, Commissioner Aldeman said, "Jerry is a citizen and he wanted to be on it." Heinemann did not attend the evening's joint meeting. None of the commissioners said he had anyone in mind for the remaining spots.

Commissioner Moyers said he did not want to become a member of the PDA at this time because he felt that Commissioner Alderman was trying to stack the PDA and he did not want to be a part of it. He also said he had many meetings to go to now and while he could not be a member of the PDA he would be involved and work with the group.

At the joint meeting, Dolan Irvine and Phil Cain spoke representing State Senator Walt Helmick who could not attend the meeting. Irvine and Cain said that during the last week the West Virginia Division of Corrections had refused an offer from the Dean they will have due to the commitment of the Commission to provide $100,000 to the new hospital project this fiscal year. (The Commission is also obligated to consider additional $100,000 contributions in following fiscal years.)

The first 50% of the money goes to the Tourism Commission under the law and the other 50% is now divided between Parks and Recreation, Library Board, Landmarks Commission, Dramas, Fairs and Festival Committee, and Arts Council. The $100,000 will come from this second 50%.

Following the discussion with the groups, the Commission voted to set aside the tax payments until the $100,000 is accumulated and then resume payments to the groups on the same proportions as now. The only change is to reduce the amount to the Library Board this year to help the Parks Board meet its mandated expenses. The $100,000 will go into an interest bearing account until the hospital project needs it with the interest going to the groups.

The Commission made two decisions involving the Development Authority. The first was to add Jerry Heinemann as a member of the Authority. The second was to name Commissioners Norman Alderman and Mike Mynuk as members and to increase the size of the Authority from 15 to 21 members. Both motions were made by Commisison President Alderman and were passed on a 2-1 vote with Commissioner Dana Moyers opposing the actions. A later motion by Mr. Mynuk to rescind Mr. Heinemann's appointment to the Authority died for lack of a second.

Other items considered by the Commission Tuesday included using Hotel/Motel tax funds to help meeting. Irvine and Cain said that during the last week the West Virginia Division of Corrections had refused an offer from the Dean Callison group, owners of the Denmar property, for the state to buy the property.

Irvine and Cain also had a letter from Joseph J. Skaff, Secretary of the Department of Military Affairs and Public Safety, to Senator Helmick asking for his help in acquiring the Denmar property for the state at no cost. The letter said, "As part of the Division of Correction's plan to relieve county jails of state inmates, the Division has submitted to the West Virginia Supreme Court the option of utilizing the Denmar hospital for that purpose. If the Division acquires the property, we have full intentions of doing so."

Irvine and Cain said they had met with the Dean Callison group on Tuesday morning and had a price for which the group was willing to sell the property back to the county. The County Commission and the PDA then went into executive session to discuss how to come up with the money.

Following the executive session members of both groups were congratulating each other and themselves on being able to work together. Irvine and Cain would return to the Dean Callison group with an offer to buy the property. Where the money was coming from was not divulged.

The one action taken by the Commission was to authorize paying about $2100 from its own funds to various people who had rescind Mr. [illegible]'s appointment to the Authority died for lack of a second.

Other items considered by the Commission Tuesday included using Hotel/Motel tax funds to help the Frost Fire Department build a basketball court (not approved), maintaining the Magistrate Court in Durbin (approved), having the second reading of the county Dog Ordinance (a hearing on the ordinance was set for February 2 at 1 pm), and a report from Sheriff C. C. Beck on a number of items from his office.

Dates for the Commission to meet as the Board of Equalization and Review were set for February 1, 2, and 5.

More details on the meeting in next week's paper.

Report to Pocahontas County Citizens

You have probably heard about the proposed routes being considered for the highway linking Elkins to Interstate 81 in Virginia, known as Corridor H. The route chosen by the commissioners, along with Senators Helmick and Ross and Delegates Martin and Proudfoot, is the Southern Route. I made my selection for one reason, that being, the southern routing benefits Pocahontas county the most.

The southern route comes no closer than 24 miles to our borders near the Mouth of Seneca and would therefore involve driving times of approximately 1/2 hour to 1 hour depending on where you live in the county. Even this amount of time would offer great convenience to those traveling out of or into our county. Improved

Following the executive session members of both groups were congratulating each other and themselves on being able to work together. Irvine and Cain would return to the Dean Callison group with an offer to buy the property. Where the money was coming from was not divulged.

The one action taken by the Commission was to authorize paying about $2100 from its own funds to various people who had worked on the Pocahontas Woods project begun by the PDA. The PDA is to reimburse the Commission when it has the money. PDA and PFP member Gibbs Kinderman said that the people providing services for the project had a right to expect payment regardless of the differences between the Commission, the PDA and PFP.

Kinderman also said he thought that the joint meeting was turning out to be fruitful and suggested quarterly joint meetings of the Commission and the PDA, to which most members of both groups nodded agreement.

The joint meeting adjourned following a verbal commitment by Commissioner Alderman to 1) drop his lawsuit against PFP, 2) not vote to abolish the PDA during the rest of his term on the Commission and 3) not vote to reduce the funds from Ross and Delegates Martin and Proudfoot, is the Southern Route. I made my selection for one reason, that being, the southern routing benefits Pocahontas county the most.

The southern route comes no closer than 24 miles to our borders near the Mouth of Seneca and would therefore involve driving times of approximately 1/2 hour to 1 hour depending on where you live in the county. Even this amount of time would offer great convenience to those traveling out of or into our county. Improved access could mean new opportunities for an expanded job base. Adequate employment continues to be a constant challenge to our citizens. This road will make a difference.

Not all Pocahontas citizens favor this route, to be sure. Some oppose it for honorable reasons. Some oppose it for selfish reasons. I address the second group with this thought - Not all of our citizens, native or otherwise, have inherited wealth or married prosperous spouses which allows them to survive without employment. On the contrary, the vast majority of our people must work their entire lives just to survive today's fast pace and expensive world. It's these honest, hard working people who deserve the chance for a decent wage and a reasonable lifestyle.

Please take a stand with us and Pocahontas Woods promotes local craftsmen

Saturday was Open House at Linwood for Pocahontas Woods. On display were clocks, beds, rocking and straight chairs, vases, games, guitars, animal carvings, music boxes, trivets, baskets, chests, and the like, and the quality was excellent.

Woods artisans who displayed their products were Hubert VanReenen, George O'Bryan, John Friel, Gene Simmons, Carlen Shinaberry, Eric Domboski, Destiny Domboski, Eric Werner, Harry Brubaker, Rick Ziegler, Dale Bennett, Joe Jesselli, Dave Elliott, Tony Kelly, Jack Horner, Dick Evans, Rita Kelly, and John Rossell.

Winners of the door prizes were Edith Workman, a tile/oak trivet made by Gene Simmons, and Jane P. Sharp, a carving by Jack Horner.

Pocahontas Woods is a volunteer organization made up of Pocahontas County woodworkers and other people who believe that fine hand crafted wood products can become an important part of our area's economic future, as well as a source of local pride. No one receives a salary from Pocahontas Woods. The mini-showroom hostess, Wanda Mullens, donates the space used. Wanda receives 10% of the price of merchandise sold to help cover some of her expenses; 20% goes into a fund to help build Pocahontas Woods, and 70% goes to the craftsman. Cramer Lumber donated the Appalachian Hardwoods used in the display showing the native county woods. Pauline Galford donated the road sign location. The Pocahontas Development Authority has pledged up to $3,000 in support for such expenses as road signs, display construction, photography, etc. They plan to take the display to Cass for the summer months, and perhaps to out-of-state crafts fairs or possibly the State Fair of West Virginia.

The Pocahontas Woods symbol is the acorn—they say they haven't accomplished a whole lot yet, but the potential and the determination are there. As an organization, they are just beginning to sprout, but glad dream of the day when all the talented woodworkers in Pocahontas County are able to make a living doing what they like best—building fine furniture and wooden items. They need help, people, and interested citizens—and they invite you to become part of the Pocahontas Woods story.

The big accorn is the logo or symbol for Pocahontas Woods and below it are forms whittled by Jack Horner. The folding wood panels hold enlargements of some old photos of loggers followed by pictures of furniture and other articles made by Pocahontas craftsmen.

Pocahontas Woods Exhibit and Sales Room occupies a corner of the sales area at the Ski Barn, on the Linwood Road as you turn from Rt. 219 to go to Snowshoe. In the summer the shop is at Cass.

Pictured is the Woods corner with Wanda Mullens, who handles the shop. Shown are many small items and a rocking chair. For Saturday larger articles—beds, chairs, etc.—were displayed beyond the "corner."

County Commission

The County Commission met for its first regular meeting of the new year on Tuesday. This was the first meeting for new Commissioner Mike Mynuk.

As its first order of business the Commission elected Norman Alderman as its new President. Following Mr. Alderman's election the Commission began a very busy meeting with a variety of topics taken under consideration.

The first item was to pass a resolution in support of the effort by the "Go South" organization to have the highway referred to as Corridor H take a southern routing from Elkins to I-81 in Virginia. This route would pass the closest to Pocahontas county and will be the most beneficial route to the county.

The proposed state prison project for the Denmar facility was discussed. The need to have a meeting with all the parties involved to see what needs to be done to bring the project to fruition was stressed. The parties are the Dean Group that owns the land, the Department of Corrections, Economic Development Authority, and State Senator Walt Helmick.

The need for local support for the project to be communicated to the Governor and members of the Legislature was also stressed. In this regard the Commission approved a resolution titled "OPERATION DENMAR, (see adjoining article) that urges the public to write expressing support for the project. It is suggested that letters be written to the Governor and our members of the Legislature. It was also pointed out that support needs to be sought from Greenbrier County officials as some of the employees at the prison will no doubt come from that county as they did for the hospital.

Commissioner Dana Moyers

Operation Denmar

At its meeting on Tuesday, the County Commission passed the following resolution urging support of the proposed prison project at Denmar:

Whereas, the loss of Denmar with the subsequent loss of many jobs has created a major economic problem for Pocahontas County;

Whereas, Denmar State Hospital was an excellent economic impact upon our community for many years;

Whereas, the State of West Virginia has indicated an interest in replacing those lost jobs with a prison;

The Pocahontas County Commission formally announces a support operation designed to assist in the efforts to locate a prison at Denmar.

This support effort shall be named "OPERATION DENMAR." Its primary effort is to assist the State of West Virginia in its efforts to establish a prison at Denmar.

"OPERATION DENMAR" shall have as its primary activity the establishment of local civic support for this enterprise.

Such activities shall consist of efforts to get people to write letters in support of the plan; to effectively coordinate local efforts with state efforts; and to keep local citizens informed of progress.

The Pocahontas County Commission therefore invites all citizens to volunteer their efforts in the campaign to get a prison at Denmar.

The Pocahontas County Commission shall serve as the legislative liaison to coordinate activities on that front.

Citizen efforts will be needed to communicate the positive impact which this will have on our entire county.

He noted the $250,000 the Commission has made available from the Cranberry Fund for the hospital project will mainly benefit the central portion of the county and the Denmar project will benefit the southern section, so in fairness an investment should be made for the northern district. Mr. Moyers said he proposes a committee be set up to make plans to come back with an acceptable plan before the money will be released.

Dr. John Sharp, who was at the meeting for a committee hearing, reminded the Commission of previous plans for an enlarged clinic and emergency room. He said another doctor will soon finish his training and plans to work in the upper end.

Mr. Mynuk said he supported the idea provided that a good study of the medical needs of the area is made. Mr. Alderman expressed concern about naming a particular source for the funds.

Following further discussion Mr. Moyers made the motion for the Commission to make a commitment of $250,000 to the health care needs in the Northern District with the commitment to be honored when an acceptable plan is submitted for Commission approval and public comment. The motion was approved on a 3-0 vote.

Following the approval of the motion there was some discussion on who should be on the study committee and the need for the public to be involved in the process.

Mr. Mynuk turned to the issue of the county flood plain ordinance. The ordinance was finally approved in April 1991 following several between the two, the Commission appointed both. However, the law authorizing landmark commissions set the maximum number of members of such groups at five. It was decided to name Frances Griffis to fill the vacancy as her name came to the Commission first.

The Commission discussed the $100,000 from Hotel/Motel tax funds that have been approved to be set aside to provide security for the loan for the new hospital project. The $100,000 will have to come from the Hotel/Motel tax funds annually if needed. As the discussion continued many questions were unanswered, the most important being when does the hospital project actually need the first $100,000 to be available. How to set aside the money to minimize the impact on the groups that have been receiving the funds was discussed. It was decided to meet with representatives of the groups involved at the next meeting to discuss their needs.

Ed Riley reviewed for the Commission the activities of the Solid Waste Authority.

Mr. Riley also discussed the financial situation facing the Health Department. He said with the just announced cutbacks in state spending and possible reductions in Medicaid payments, the Department may not have the money to stay open in May and June.

Mr. Riley also reported that the future of local health departments is in doubt. He reviewed recommendations by the Health Care Planning Commission that call for the regionalization of the environmental services provided by

Following the approval of the motion there was some discussion on who should be on the study committee and the need for the public to be involved in the process.

Mr. Mynuk turned to the issue of the county flood plain ordinance. The ordinance was finally approved in April 1991 following several years of controversy and a change in the Commission's make-up in the 1990 elections. It remained a sore point between Mr. Alderman, who opposes the ordinance, and his fellow commissioners for the balance of the life of the 1991-92 Commission.

Mr. Mynuk proposed the Commission seek public opinion on the issue by having two public meetings, on February 16, from 9 to 11 a. m., and February 17, at 7:00 p. m., as well as place a questionnaire in the paper for people to send back to the Court House.

Mr. Moyers said he wonders if there is a way to discuss this issue fairly and intelligently and without emotion. He said he is not sure if this is possible due to all the controversy that has surrounded the matter over the years. He asked if both sides of the issue will be presented at the hearings. Mr. Mynuk said that they would be.

Mr. Moyers also said that regardless of popular feeling on the flood plain ordinance, this issue belongs to the Commission. He noted that decisions must be made sometimes regardless of public opinion. He asked if the Commission is to put all issues on the ballot before taking action.

Mr. Mynuk's proposal was approved by a 2-1 vote with Mr. Moyers casting the no vote.

not have the money to stay open in May and June.

Mr. Riley also reported that the future of local health departments is in doubt. He reviewed recommendations by the Health Care Planning Commission that call for the regionalization of the environmental services provided by the local departments and turning the medical services over to private health providers.

Court House Custodian Marvin Beverage gave the Commission a list of maintenance items needed to be done on the building. These include roof work on both the old and new sections, painting, cover cover floors that have tile containing asbestos, carpet replacement, repairs to the parking lot, ceiling tile replacement, and replacement of the curtains in the court room. Mr. Beverage also listed the need for an elevator to improve access to the court room as required by the new law concerning access for handicapped people, additional storage space for records, and a new fuel tank.

In discussing access to the court room for disabled persons, Mr. Beverage said the idea of moving the wheelchair lift system now on the steps near the Sheriff's office to the steps near the Extension office and adding another unit to reach the third floor will not work. The problem is fire safety regulations that require two exits from the third floor. If the wheel chair lift is on the back steps, they will no longer be considered a fire exit.

A proposed set of guidelines for granting tax exemptions was discussed and then tabled for action at a later meeting.

State Prison at Denmar Possible

On Monday Public Safety Director Joseph Skaff presented a three point plan to the State Supreme Court to carry out the Court ordered elimination of over crowding of county jails by state prisoners. Part of the plan is to convert the former state hospital at Denmar to a prison for medium security prisoners.

It could be possible to have the site ready for use by 150 prisoners within three to six months and up to 200 prisoners eventually. The report to the Court said it would cost $2.2 million a year to operate and $354,000 for renovations and repairs.

The purchase price is not included in the report. The property was donated to the County Commission by the State after the hospital closed and since sold into private ownership. Since the idea of a prison surfaced several weeks ago there have been discussions with the present owners on how the property could become available for the project and at what cost.

Other parts of the plan include the regional jails now being constructed and an addition at the Huttonsville prison.

To carry out the plan the Legislature will have to provide additional funding to the Department of Corrections.

Lawsuit Filed Against Development Authority

Following the meeting of the Economic Development Authority on December 23 that resulted in the transfer of the EDA's assets to the newly organized private, non-profit group Progress for Pocahontas, a suit against the EDA and PFP was filed by Norman Alderman. In filing the suit Mr. Alderman acted as a private citizen and not in his position as county commissioner.

In his suit Mr. Alderman is asking the Court to issue an injunction against the EDA to prevent the transfer of any funds to another group. If a transfer has already been made to PFP the suit asks for an injunction to require PFP to return the funds. Mr. Alderman's suit contends that the actions taken by the EDA at its meeting on the 23rd were illegal based on violations of several sections of the state's open meeting law. The suit also alleges the calling of the meeting also violates the EDA's own by-laws.

A hearing on the suit was held before Circuit Judge Frank Jolliffe on January 28. Following the hearing Judge Jolliffe issued a temporary injunction freezing any use of the funds involved in Mr. Alderman's suit.

A date for a further hearing in the matter has not yet been set.

Mr. Moyers urged that the Commission not go this route but go to the EDA and try to rebuild trust between it and the Commission. He stressed that the members of the EDA were honorable people who believe the work the Authority is doing is valuable and took their recent actions due to the often repeated desire of Mr. Alderman to eliminate the body.

Mr. Alderman said he was not opposed to an effort to heal the wounds between the two groups but feels the legal steps need to continue until such a reconciliation might take place.

Mr. Alderman's four motions were all approved on a 2-1 vote with Mr. Moyers opposed.

Mr. Moyers again urged that differences between the Commission and the EDA. To this end, it was agreed unanimously to invite the EDA to come to the next Commission meeting January 18, "for the purpose of discussing common objectives and to consider future efforts to advance economic development opportunities for the benefit of Pocahontas County citizens. We wish to meet in the spirit of fellowship and we hope to discover bonds in common. It is our intention to work in unity for the future."

The EDA members are asked to come at 6 p. m. on the 18th.

Don McNeel and Jane Hamed were reappointed to the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital Board of Trustees.

Mr. Mynuk told his fellow commissioners that if cuts have to be made in the county budget, the Commission should set an example. He said he would fulfill a campaign promise to take $2000 less in salary for the remainder of the 92-93 fiscal year. Mr. Moyers and Mr. Alderman commended him for his action but declined to join him. Mr. Alderman noted he has a son attending an expensive college.

Due to the plans to meet late on the 18th, the meeting will begin at 10 a. m. instead of 9.

On Wednesday, December 23, the Pocahontas Development Authority voted to contribute $25,000 to the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital building fund and then to transfer its remaining financial assets to a newly-created non-profit organization, "Progress for Pocahontas, Inc." The initital board of directors of the new organization is made up of current members of the Pocahontas Development Authority; its by-laws provide that on an ongoing basis the County Commission will be asked to make annual nominations to fill four of the six seats on the Progress for Pocahontas Board which will come up for election each year.

The Develoment Authority released the following statement to the press regarding this move:

"For three years we have been working diligently on the difficult task of expanding the job base in Pocahontas County. There have been controversies, setbacks, and disappointments, but in recent months we have begun to make progress on several fronts.

1) Our planning efforts have focussed primarily on the wood products industry, with committees working on the possibility of developing a sawmill waste utilization business, a timber bridge building business, and a furniture components business, as well as our craft furniture marketing effort, "Pocahontas Woods."

2) After several months of discussion and study, we are about to employ a half-time Development Coordinator, whose primary job will be to work with existing county businesses to help them find opportunities for expansion.

3) We have been supporting the efforts of Dean-Callison Associates and Senator Walt Helmick to bring jobs back to Denmar. At the present time there is a good possibility of a Department of Corrections facility being located at Denmar, which would bring upwards of 50 jobs back to the Hillsboro area.

When the State turned Denmar over to the County Commission, there was a moral commitment to use 10% of the proceeds of any sale of the facility to promote health services in Pocahontas County. Our donation of $25,000 to the new hospital meets this obligation.

Several months ago the County Commission voted to give the Development Authority the $250,000 received from the sale of Denmar, and charged us with using the money (aside from any commitments in the health care field) to promote economic growth in Pocahontas County, with particular attention to the Hillsboro threatens the Denmar project. It is our belief that the bulk of the Denmar sale money needs to be kept intact, to be used if needed to make sure the new prospect of jobs at Denmar can become a reality. But one of the County Commissioners has called for turning over at least half that money to the Cranberry fund, where it would be kept so that the interest could be used to support court house operations, and would not be available to help out with Denmar.

In addition, that Commissioner has said that he will vote to abolish the Development Authority altogether, and another Commissioner says he has not yet made up his mind on the issue. Killing the Development Authority at this time would kill the job development projects we are currently working on, and would waste all the volunteer effort our members have contributed over the last few years.

We believe that economic development for Pocahontas County is too important to be sacrificed to the political passions of the moment. As a group, we are interested in progress, not politics. We have created "Progress for Pocahontas, Inc." and voted to transfer the PDA funds to this new group, the Denmar money as well as our other resources, because we are determined to keep on working, with the help of the citizens of Pocahontas County, to build a

Now Commissioner Alderman has asked the Circuit Court to invalidate our action in turning over the funds to Progress for Pocahontas, Inc. We continue to believe that we have done the right and proper thing, and have acted within our powers as a Development Authority. The courts will decide this question, but no matter how it turns out, we are determined, as individuals, to continue to work for the economic betterment of Pocahontas County, regardless of whether we do this as members of the Development Authority or as private citizens."

Supreme Court to hear local case at Law School

The Clerk of the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has selected a local case, State ex rel Galford v. Mark A.B., as one of only five cases selected each year, to be argued before the Supreme Court which will at that time be specially convened at the West Virginia University College of Law on March 9, 1992, in Morgantown to hear the case. The case, which concerns the appeal of a 14 year old boy who was stripped searched by his school principal, "presents issues which may be of particular interest to law students" said Ancil G. Ramey, Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals. It is expected that the complete proceedings will also be broadcast live on Clarksburg television.

Martin V. Saffer, who represents the child who was searched, will argue the case. "This case concerns the most fundamental constitutional guarantee; the right of privacy, the right to be left alone and to be free from governmental intrusion" said Saffer. The case arises under the 4th Amendment to the United States Constitution which guarantees "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures." The West Virginia Constitution contains an almost identical provision.

The strip search of a public school student is the first case of its kind to come before the Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. The case of interest to students and parents alike. According to Mr. Ramey, several school classes in the state are following this case as part of their curriculum on government. The West Virginia Civil Liberties Union, a state branch of the American Civil Liberties Union, has filed an Amicus Curiae (Friend of the Court). Brief in the case which supports the position taken by Mr. Saffer that the search was unreasonable and should not have taken place without probable cause and a search warrant, as well as the permission and presence of the parents.

According to Saffer, various federal and state courts have described strip searches, in which all clothing is removed or in which a person's body is otherwise totally exposed to view, as "demeaning, undignified, humiliating, terrifying, unpleasant, embarrassing, repulsive, signifying degradation and submission." Children may be especially susceptible to possible trauma from such an intrusive action, added Saffer.

The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized in other cases dealing with school children, that although Boards of Education have highly discretionary functions, they may do no act outside of the Bill of Rights. "That they are educating the young for citizenship is reason for scrupulous protection of Constitutional freedoms of the individual, if we are not to strangle the free mind at its source and teach youth to discount important principles of our government as mere platitudes." West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 US 624.

"It is a privilege to argue this particular case, for the decision of the Court will draw the line behind which the privacy and personal dignity of children will be protected from unreasonable governmental intrusion," said Saffer.

Tree farmin'

Mrs. Rabel's Kindergarten Class at Green Bank enjoyed a very pleasant afternoon with Bernie and Madeline Galford on December 22. The children enjoyed looking at the pine trees. We examined the trees to discover the age of each tree and how to care for them. We ran through the maze of trees surprising our chaperones. Mrs. Rabel and Mrs. Gragg were delighted with our behavior. After playing in the pines, we returned to the house for Madeline's delicious homemade cookies and hot chocolate. As we left she gave each of us a pine cone ornament and candy cane.

We would like to express our appreciation to the Galfords for having us and our chaperones, Mrs. Rittenhouse, Mrs. Norrod, and Miss Rabel for driving us.

Gravely is top vo-ed student

James Gravely has been named as Pocahontas County High School's All American Vocational Student. More than 1,000 local winners have been selected, representing every state in the U. S. This is the first year of the national awards program.

The local SERVISTAR retailer, Glade's Building Supply, is supporting vocational education in this area by participating in the Tools for Tomorrow program.

The All American Vocational Student Awards Program is part of an umbrella program titled "Tools for Tomorrow: Local SERVISTAR Retailers in Support of Vocational Education in America." This program is designed to raise public awareness of the importance of vocational education to the community and highlight the accomplishments and contributions of area vocational students. SERVISTAR Corporation, launched the Tools for Tomorrow and the All-American Vocational Student Awards program at the beginning of the 1992-93 school year.

Local winners have earned the opportunity to proceed to state judging levels. One winner from each state will be selected, awarded a $500 U. S. Savings Bond and then moved on to the national judging.

The Tools for Tomorrow Advisory Board in Washington, D. C. will review the state winners and select up to 10 All-American winners and up to 12 Special Merit students.

Each All American winner will receive a $1,000 U. S. Savings Bond and a trip (with an accompanying adult) to Washington, D. C. for a variety of recognition events and special activities. The Special Merit students will receive $500 U. S. Savings Bonds.

Students interested in the program were required to complete a comprehensive application listing honors and awards, school and community activities, plans for further schooling and career goals, essays about the vocational program, references from a nominating teacher or counselor and endorsements from the school principal or vocational director.

"Vocational education plays a critical role in the future economy and in our local communities. We see the need to help vocational education garner the attention, recognition and respect it deserves," said Paul E. Pentz, president and chief executive officer of SERVISTAR Corporation. "Eighteen of the 20 fastest growing occupations require a vocational education. Statistics show that vocational and technical education students have a better chance of viable employment and that the drop-out rate is lower among vocational education students. We at SERVISTAR see vocational education as the key to a well-trained, well-educated workforce to support this country's future."

SERVISTAR Corporation, headquartered in Butler, Pennsylvania, is a member-owned wholesaler with more than 4,000 hardware, lumber and home center stores worldwide. Many of the U. S.-based owners are participating in Tools for Tomorrow in their local communities.

Denmar Back in State Hands

Last Wednesday afternoon the Denmar property again became the property of the State of West Virginia, the first step toward turning the former hospital facility into a unit of the state prison system.

Coming to the Court House for the transfer of the property to the Department of Corrections were Deborah Huck, Administrative Assistant to the DOC Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner, DOC attorney Rita Stewart, and Huttonsville Correctional Center Warden William Duncil. Also involved in the property transfer were Prosecuting Attorney David Arrington, County Commissioner Mike Mynuk, Pocahontas Development Authority President Walt Weiford and the stockholders of Dean, Callison Associates, Inc.: Sterl Dean, Summers Dean, Elmer Dean and Joel Callison.

The property was actually transferred three times on Wednesday. The first transfer was from Dean, Callison Associates, Inc. to the corporation's four owners. The second deed transferred the property from the three Deans, Mr. Callison and their wives to the County Commission. The final deed of the day put the property in the possession of the

Inc. to the corporation's four owners. The second deed transferred the property from the three Deans, Mr. Callison and their wives to the County Commission. The final deed of the day put the property in the possession of the West Virginia Department of Corrections.

For the transfer to the county, $495,000 was needed to pay the Dean, Callison group. The money came from the Development Authority, $250,000, and the County Commission $245,000. The Authority money was the money the county had received from Dean-Callison when they purchased the property. Included in the $250,000 is $25,000 the Authority had donated to the new hospital project, but the hospital Board agreed to release it for the Denmar purchase. The Commission's $245,000 is from the Cranberry Fund.

Mr. Mynuk and Mr. Weiford had been given authority by their respective bodies to transfer the funds to the Deans and Mr. Callison. They prepared four checks, two for 46% of the total amount and two for 4% of the total.

Ms. Huck said the DOC would take possession of the property and begin assessment of the amount of renovation needed. (Watchmen have been on duty since Wednesday). Work, using prisoners, from the Huttonsville Correctional Center, will begin as begin assessment of the amount of renovation needed. (Watchmen have been on duty since Wednesday). Work, using prisoners, from the Huttonsville Correctional Center, will begin as soon as possible on the building.

One area that is known that needs to be upgraded is the toilet/shower facilities. The contribution of a fence to surround the property will be let to contract.

The goal is to have the prison functioning in October with about 150 prisoners. The first inmates will come from Huttonsville, which is to be the parent institution for the new facility. The prisoners to be brought to Denmar will be those who have proven less of a security risk.

Ms. Huck said the hiring of staff for the new prison will start after the beginning of the new fiscal year in July. There will be about 50 Divisions of Corrections employees as well as about six educational employees. Two-thirds of the employees are to be hired from the local area, according to Ms. Huck. Food and medical services are expected to be provided on a contract basis and will provide additional employment.

Anyone interested in obtaining employment for the state positions at Denmar have to get their names on the Civil Service register. Correctional officer positions require a high school diploma, but no prior training. Those employed will be sent to the state Corrections Academy for training. The Job Service office at Ronceverte can be contacted for information on the Civil Service system.

Ms. Huck also discussed the plan for a "boot camp" program to be conducted at Denmar. This program will be for young, first-time offenders and be run with a military camp atmosphere and discipline. The educational and social skill needs of the participants will be emphasized. The boot camp program will be for well-screened volunteers from the 18-25 year-old inmates. This will be the first program of this type in this state. Ms. Huck said she did not know yet when the boot camp program will start but perhaps by the end of the year.

Storm of the Century

Last weekend's blizzard was right on schedule as projected by the National Weather Service—the weathermen themselves said they didn't believe it would so happen this late in the season. Air from the gulf, heavy with moisture, struck the cold air from the north, and an extremely low pressure area produced tornadoes in Florida, hurricane winds up the coast, and blizzards in the whole eastern United States. Twenty-two states were affected and the storm was compared to a storm in March of 1888.

Pocahontas barometer readings set a record low of 28.6.

The fine snow began Friday night and by Saturday morning there was serious snow—and it snowed all day and all night. The wind blew, roaring on the mountains. It was hard to measure the drifting snow.

James Schaffner, at Seneca State Forest, recorded 23.1 inches of snow for the weekend storm total. On Tuesday morning it was down to 19 inches with a snowmelt of 3.01. The bottom 4 inches are ice granules; with 1/2 inch rain predicted he doesn't think there will be much runoff. Snowfall was recorded 11 days up to March 15, with 34.1 inches of snow. The previous highest monthly snowfall was February 1974 with 37.9 inches. The wind at Seneca was clocked at 21 mph Friday night and 25 mph Sunday morning.

At Snowshoe the winds were extremely strong, with...

The previous highest monthly snowfall was February 1974 with 37.9 inches. The wind at Seneca was clocked at 21 mph Friday night and 25 mph Sunday morning.

At Snowshoe the winds were extremely strong, with gusts up to 80 mph. Their total snowfall last week was reported to be 59 inches. They are still digging out cars.

Road crews worked steadily, end loaders worked in town, plus tractors and trucks with snowblades went into action, and Pocahontas recovered better than most places. There was no school on Monday but by Tuesday students were back. It was reported that ours was the only system in the state back in operation on Tuesday.

Pocahontas residents were blessed with electricity. Only in the Green Bank area was there an outage for a few hours, due to a tree falling across the line.

The strong wind Saturday night blew down a barn belonging to Albert Wilfong and killed 25 head of cattle. The 30 x 65 ft. barn, located on the Pansy Shinaberry farm, had about 2,000 square bales of hay, and a bull and 26 three-year-old heifers. Two may live. The barn collapsed during the night and wasn't discovered until Sunday afternoon. Many neighbors hurried to help uncover the cattle.

The draft EIS finds that the contractor of the new telescope will not have a significant impact on the environment. It notes that a similar finding resulted in the EIS for the much larger 330 foot telescope project now under construction.

The operation of the telescope is not expected to have much impact on the overall number of employees at Green Bank. However, it will help to stabilize the employment situation at the Observatory.

Written comments on the draft EIS must be made by March 31 and should be addressed to Dr. Ludwig F. Octer, Division of Astronomical Sciences, National Science Foundation, 1800 G Street, NW Room 615, Washington, D. C. 20550.

Additional Scope Proposed at Observatory

The National Science Foundation has prepared a draft Environmental Impact Assessment for the construction of a new telescope at the National Radio Astronomy Oservatory's Green Bank facility. The proposed telescope will have a receiving surface of approximately 20 meters (66 feet) in diameter.

The new telescope is to be operated by the NRAO for the U.S. Naval Observatory. Once completed it will replace an interferometer consisting of three telescopes, now in use by the Naval Observatory at Green Bank.

The USNO requires the operation of fairly large radio telescopes which observe distant natural radio sources known as quasars. Quasars are celestial objects that emit immense quantities of visible light and/or radio waves and appear to be at extremely large distances from Earth.

Thus, the radio signals reaching Earth are quite weak, and their collection requires telescopes of the size proposed for Green Bank. The planned observations at the Green Bank site will be combined with data obtained with comparable telescopes operated by the U.S. Navy at Gilmore Creek, Alaska, and Kokee Park, Kauai, Hawaii, in addition to data currently collected at Green Bank with the aging USNO interferometer. This combination process is known as Very Long Baseline Interferometry. The primary result of this effort is the establishment of the most accurate orientation of the Earth that is possible, currently on the order of one centimeter, an essential requirement of navigational purposes of the Department of Defense.

The new telescope will be located close to the existing

Set rises on new county play

The Pocahontas County Drama Workshop is in high gear to have the curtain open April 16th on the play Picnic at the municipal building. But as the actors are learning lines and rehearsing three nights a week, the set crew has worries of its own. Over the last several weeks they have worked to create the front of a large Texas farmhouse with a second story window and a big front porch. Eddie Brown and Luther Pritt are working on designing and painting the set after it was built under the direction of Roger VanReenan.

Eddie first got interested in drama working with Ms. Armstrong at Marlinton Middle School seven years ago. Two years ago he worked on the set for The Mousetrap at PCHS with Mr. Taylor. Then last summer he got a chance to work on the set for the movie Sommersby with his sister Kathleen. He learned how to paint buildings to look old, and worked on some special effects for the battle scenes. The "bombs" used for cannons were paper with gunpowder wrapped inside and soaked in wax.

Eddie spent several months working on the movie set. He said "they fed you well" on shrimp and oysters, and he got to talk to Richard Gere and Jody Foster. He said it was exciting, and that he learned a lot more about artwork than he ever did in class.

But for Picnic, Eddie likes being in charge of the design and painting of the set. Painting for a play, he says, "is just another form of art". The challenge is to paint the flat backboards so they look like raised boards with a roof, and to make the whole set look real enough for the audience to believe it is really happening in front of them.

Another member of the set crew is Luther Pritt. His first play was a Christmas play with Mr. Holsopple in Hillsboro. He also worked on the set of The Mousetrap. Luther likes drama because he likes learning about how other people lived and looked in past history. Although this play took place 50 years ago, he sees similarities with people today. "Mothers worried then that their daughters' boyfriends weren't up to high standards. But maybe they have even more to a worry about today."

The show will be put on the weekends of April 16 and April 23. Tickets will go on sale the week before Easter. Dress Rehearsal on Thursday, April 15 will be open and free of charge to all people who worked on The Mousetrap; Night of January 16; Cass; The Play; or the Pearl Buck play.

A simple man, enjoying life's simple pleasures.
Simple, what does that mean?
In terms of Roxie it meant not involved in earthly riches and ways.

His dress was a pair of faded blue bib overalls and plaid shirt.

Roxie was natural, childlike in his ways, not sophisticated.
And like a child he won our hearts with his smile and pleasing ways.

The years he spent with us he gave much pleasure to staff and other residents.
He was open, straightforward, humble, always offering his service to others without expecting a reward.

We will always remember his service to other residents.
Pushing a wheelchair, fetching a drink of water, taking pleasure in doing for others.

The past months were so hard for all of us, to see you suffer, to lose your smile and ability to serve others.

Rainbow Murder Trial Enters Second Week

by Pam Pritt

Testimony by investigators, residents of Droop Mountain and experts has marked the first week of the trial of the initial Rainbow Murder defendent, as the prosecution attempts to prove a former Hillsboro man shot two young women.

Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford said in his opening argument that testimony would show that Jacob Beard, "obtained a gun and shot these girls...perhaps out of anger, perhaps out of ridicule or perhaps out of frustration." Weiford continued that he has little physical evidence, no weapon was ever found, but asked the jury members to "assess the testimony of individuals" when reaching their verdict.

In his opening argument, defense attorney Stephen Farmer asked the jury to rely on the evidence and consider that other men had over the years confessed to the crime, only to withdraw their statements. Farmer further related some of the details of Beard's alibi and asked for a verdict of not guilty.

Farmer asked for a directed verdict on the charges of abduction with intent to defile, saying that Weiford had failed to address Beard's participation in such activities in his opening statements. Circuit Judge Charles Lobban denied the motion without predjudice, saying he reserved the right to give a verdict after further study of Weiford's remarks. Weiford asked that the judge delay a verdict on the secondary charges until after the state presents its entire case.

The two bodies were found late in the evening of June 25, 1980, by Dr. Robert Must, who testified Wednesday that he could tell that the girls were dead and made it a point not to touch the bodies. They were were lying face up along side the lane leading to Must's home on Briery Knob. Must said he went to the nearest phone as quickly as possible to report the incident to police.

The bodies were later identified as Nancy Santomero, 19, of Huntington, Long Island, New York and Vicky Durian, 26, of Wellman, Iowa.

Dr. Irvin Sopher, state medical examiner, testified that the girls had multiple gunshot wounds fired from a high-powered rifle or pistol in rapid succession at close range.

Santomero, Sopher said, was shot three times, once through the right breast, once through the left collarbone and again through the left temple. Sopher said that from powder burns and bullet holes in her multiple gunshot wounds fired from a high-powered rifle or pistol in rapid succession at close range.

Santomero, Sopher said, was shot three times, once through the right breast, once through the left collarbone and again through the left temple. Sopher said that from powder burns and bullet holes in her clothing, Santomero had assumed a defensive position when she was shot through the collarbone. Durian was shot twice in the chest area, and was probably flexed at the waist and rotated left when the two "high velocity missiles" entered her body, Sopher stated. The medical examiner said that from blood stains on the clothing, which was entered as evidence, the bodies had been lying face down for a time after the shootings, allowing blood to seep through the entrance wounds.

Sopher would not testify to any specific time of death.

First Sgt. Robert R. Alkire testified that Beard became a suspect in 1982 when anonymous telephone calls to Howard Durian, the father of one of the victims, were traced to Beard. Alkire said Beard told Howard Durian that he was "ashamed of local police and wanted to get the ball rolling on the investigation."

Alkire said at that time Beard began to provide investigators with information about the murders, none of which led to any evidence connected with the case. "Local people did the killing and a local girl saw it," Alkire quoted Beard as saying.

Several witnesses from the Droop Mountain area testified to seeing Beard on June 25, 1980.

Testifying on Thursday, William Scott, a witness for the prosecution, reported seeing Beard the earliest, around 3:30 p.m. that day nearly 13 years ago. Scott was on his way home from work at Denmar State Hospital. Scott said he saw Beard's truck speed out of the Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park road and slide as the driver "locked it up." Scott said he was concerned that the vehicle might not get stopped and was able to identify Beard as the driver. Scott said he was home by 4:00 p.m. and saw none of the other defendants named.

Also on Thursday, Odessa "Sis" Hively testifed to seeing Beard's truck, co-defendants Richard Fowler's van and Gerald Brown's truck at the south entrance to the park around 5:30 p.m. that day while on her way to a Little League baseball game. Hively said that she saw two unidentified people walking across the park road to another vehicle. She said she saw Beard later at a Board of Education meeting which dealt with the consolidation of the Hillsboro school. She commented that Beard was "red-faced and argumentative" and appeared to be drinking when he argued with the Superintendent of Schools about an unrelated topic. Hively said that although she could not be sure of the time the meeting began, it was later than the usual 7:30 p.m. because the crowd from Hillsboro caused the proceedings to be moved to the Marlinton Elementary cafeteria and was further delayed while a public dinner meeting broke up and was cleared.

washed out Fowler's van at Brown's home. Steve Goode said that as he walked north on 219 to meet Mike Hively for a bait-gathering trip, he saw the van backed perpendicular to the trailer and near a hot water heater access and a hose feeding from there into the back doors of the van. Goode said the trio came to the front of the van as he walked by, but in spite of the fact that they were all acquainted, offered no friendly greeting.

Mike Hively, Brown's half-brother, said on the witness stand that he recalled seeing the van parked at Brown's home, but didn't remember seeing the men or the water hose. He said that there were no other vehicles on the adjacent land.

Both Goode and Hively recounted meeting ambulances and police cars on their return trip to Droop Mountain later that night.

A former Marlinton resident, Keith Cohenour, testified Thursday that while he was at Brown's trailer a few months later, Beard, Fowler and McCoy arrived together. Brown immediately went inside, Cohenour said, and Beard followed. When the two men exited the residence, they were arguing, according to Cohenour's testimony, loudly enough that he could hear Beard instruct Brown to, "keep his mouth shut and your peons, too." The witness said that as he talked with Fowler and McCoy, Beard passed by and told McCoy to, "keep his mouth shut or he'd end up on Briery Knob, too."

Cohenour gave his original statement to police from the Huttonsville Correctional Center, but denied asking for any favors in exchange for his cooperation with investigators.

One witness provided only sketchy details of his own whereabouts on the day of the 1980 murders, but his version of the killings, which he now says was fabricated, is surprisingly consistent with police evidence.

In 1983, Bobby Lee Morrison told police that Gerald Brown had killed the women because they repulsed Brown's sexual advances. Morrison said then that the two men had picked up the girls south of Hillsboro and taken them to Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park, where they drank some moonshine and discussed partying habits until Brown began to allude to having sex, which the women declined. Morrison said in 1983 that he went to sleep and awoke to the sound of gunfire and flashes of light. He said he thought the girls were shot in the chest, but didn't really want to look at the bodies, Morrison said in 1983. He told police in his earliest statement that he helped Brown load the bodies on the back of Brown's pick-up truck and dump them farther up the mountain, by a secluded lane. Morrison lost track of his whereabouts when Brown drove toward Richwood to dispose of the girls' belongings, the statement said. Morrison's statement in 1983 also said that Brown threatened him that evening, if he ever told anyone what he saw.

Farmer said that police evidence concurs that the women had been drinking, one more than the other, that they were not sexually assaulted and the girls were both shot in the chest. The defense attorney asked Morrison about his identification of the type of gun used to kill

Farmer said that police evidence concurs that the women had been drinking, one more than the other, that they were not sexually assaulted and the girls were both shot in the chest. The defense attorney asked Morrison about his identification of the type of gun used to kill Santomero and Durian. Morrison said his pick—a .357 magnum pistol—was a lucky guess.

About his 1983 statement, Morrison testified Friday that Beard had instructed him on what to say during a roadside chat in Beard's pickup truck in January 1983. Morrison also said he made up other details, and he said the police asked leading questions that helped him to guess the answers.

Farmer said that police were led to Morrison when Harry McMillion told Greenbrier County Sherrif's deputies that members of the Morrison family had information about the murders and asked Morrison to agree that was how police found him. Morrison said he did not know Harry McMillion and agreed to Farmer's question that if Melvin Morrison told police that Bobby Lee Morrison had been present at the shootings, and that Brown had afterwards threatend him, the statement would be a lie. Melvin Morrison, Bobby Lee Morrison's uncle, is now deceased.

Brown was arrested and subsequently indicted by the Grand Jury in 1983 for the murders, but was later released and charges dropped when Morrison, then 20, recanted the accusatory statement and made the claim against Beard.

Farmer made a motion to have Bobby Lee Morrison's 1983 polygraph examination results entered as evidence. While the jury was sequestered, Farmer said that the polygraph tests would show that Morrison was truthful when he accused Brown, but deceitful when he recanted the statement and claimed Beard had made threats. Farmer said that these results would show "witness' state of mind and credibility."

Lobban denied the motion citing the unreliability of polygraph examinations and the number of polygraph tests that have been taken by investigators regarding the case which would also have to be admitted as evidence.

Brown died in February 1993, apparently of natural causes. Morrison was granted immunity by the state in connection with the murders in 1983.

Farmer commented to reporters during a brief recess that the testimony Morrison gave, "absolutely clearly demonstrates that Bobby Lee Morrison was there."

Morrison now claims he was on a fishing expedition with his brother and a friend, but only briefly recounted a tale of illegally killing a deer on their way to the South Fork of the Cherry River and bringing the carcass out to a relative. They returned to the wilderness-like area to spend the next few days fishing, Morrison said. When they hiked out to meet their waiting girlfriends, they found the young women terrified and toting a shotgun because two girls had been found dead on Briery Knob the evening before, he testified. Morrison said he commented at the time, "I'm glad I know where I was."

Morrison's brother later corroborated the fishing trip alibi. Defense attorney Bob Allen asked Dale Morrison if his brother Bobby Lee had owned a .357 magnum pistol and Dale said, "Yes, Bobby Lee got it about the time this guy (Beard) started threatening us." Bobby Lee Morrison previously testified that he had not owned a weapon of that type.

A resident of the Briery Knob area at the time, Virginia Schoolcraft, testified Thursday that she heard gunshots around 4:15 p.m. when she was caring for her two young daughters. She said that she was on the porch when she heard the shots and did not hear any others later in the day. Schoolcraft said the shots came fast like, "bang, bang, bang." Schoolcraft, who lives with Arnie Cutlip, a co-defendant, said that she saw no vehicles or individuals that day, but testified that she had no visibility to the Briery Knob Road from her residence.

day. Schoolcraft said the shots came fast like, "bang, bang, bang. Schoolcraft, who lives with Arnie Cutlip, a co-defendant, said that she saw no vehicles or individuals that day, but testified that she had no visibility to the Briery Knob Road from her residence.

Evidence previously thought lost by investigators surfaced suddenly last week. Paint chips found in the girls' clothing that were submitted for FBI testing, were believed lost, Weiford said, but were found before the trial began. The chips were sent to another forensics lab for testing, and that lab's report was faxed to the prosecution Tuesday night, Weiford said.

Defense counsel for Beard objected to the chips and the second report being admitted as evidence because the judge's previously ordered the prosecution to provide the defense with any physical evidence prior to the trial. Allen said he was denied access to the chips because it was reported that they would not be entered as evidence.

Weiford said that he had only recently been made aware of the chips' availability himself and cited precedent which establishes that the state is allowed to use new evidence of which it is unaware, if defense counsel is made aware of said evidence immediately. Weiford said that the availability of the paint chips themselves should not have altered the defense's preparation for the trial.

Allen said that he was not sure he understood the connection of the report to the case, but assumed that Weiford would attempt to connect the paint chips to Richard Fowler's blue van.

Lobban will compare the two reports and rule later on the admissibility of the new evidence.

According to the testimony of Pam Wilson, Fowler stopped his van and picked up the two women in front of her Renick's Valley residence on June 25, 1980. He drove north toward Droop Mountain, she said.

While on the stand Thursday, Dale Morrison also testified that one evening after the June slayings, he observed Fowler and Bill McCoy patching a large bullet hole in the back door of the van. Dale Morrison said Fowler told him that while the pair were groundhog hunting, "Bill let the gun go off." But Dale Morrison, on cross-examination, could not say if the bullet hole had any connection to the murders.

Following a day off on Monday, to allow other court business to be handled, the trial continued on Tuesday. As the trial resumed, one of the alternate jurors had to replace a original juror who had been involved in an accident on Friday.

Alkire continued as a witness Tuesday and testified to investigation proceedings. Alkire said that Linda Rohrbaugh gave an agent of the state a necklace that she allegedly received as a gift from Brown. FBI comparisons of the necklace and a similar necklace in a photograph of one of the victims proved inconclusive; however, Lobban allowed both the necklace and the photograph as evidence.

Lobban also allowed paint chips, previously thought unavailable, entered as evidence after an in camera hearing [without the jury].

Sgt. John R. Giacalone, scientific forensic chemist with the Criminal Investigation Bureau, testified Tuesday that his chemical analysis of paint chips the state plans to introduce as evidence before the jury, showed blue metallic paint with a gray primer underneath and a black overlay.

Allen questioned the validity of the testing, saying that the original FBI report showed no mention of black paint in connection with the chips they tested. Although Giacalone said on the stand that the report said that some of the chips did "not represent usual motor vehicle finish," he said that they all came from the same surface.

Allen continued to question Giacalone about his "findings [that were] not also made by the FBI," and questioned whether the CIB chemist had tested the same chips as the FBI had in 1980 since one of the packets containing paint chips was not marked with FBI case numbers.

Giacalone firmly stated that the contents of the packet were in his evidence locker from the time he took his current position in 1984 and the time Alkire contacted him to re-examine the paint chips.

Alkire testified that when he first contacted the CIB lab, he was told that the chips were unavailable. But early last week, by direction of the Prosecutor, he had re-contacted the lab and found that they were in Giacalone's possession.

Giacalone testified that while he was given no other vehicular paint to compare with the chips, investigators did provide part of a metal frame from one of the backpacks. Giacalone said that the paint chips did not come from the blue backpack frame.

Defense counsel objected strenuously to the allowance of the paint chips as evidence.

Allen has said that he believes that Weiford will attempt to link the paint chips to Richard Fowler's 1971 blue Chevrolet van.

frame from [illegible] backpacks. Giacalone said that the paint chips did not come from the blue backpack frame.

Defense counsel objected strenuously to the allowance of the paint chips as evidence.

Allen has said that he believes that Weiford will attempt to link the paint chips to Richard Fowler's 1971 blue Chevrolet van.

The van itself is unavailable as evidence. It was crushed in 1987 in a Virginia junk yard, Alkire said.

Lobban commented to Allen and Farmer that they may have time to have private analysis of the paint chips given the pace of the court proceedings.

Defense counsel questioned Alkire intensely about who knew that Bobby Lee Morrison had given a statement incriminating Brown. Alkire testified that only law enforcement officials and prosecutors knew about Brown's impending arrest. Alkire said he did not know if any of the others with knowledge about Brown's arrest had disclosed the information to any other individual.

Under questioning by Weiford, Alkire testified later that on the night Brown was arrested, the Sergeant was at the home of Steve Hunter, the Prosecuting Attorney in 1983, when Hunter was visited by Beard. Alkire was unable to relate the details of the conversation between the other two men.

Hunter's name also appeared in Alkire's testimony in connection with the statement of Pam Clutter, who said in 1983 that she saw two Rainbow women in Hillsboro with a red knife bearing the insignia of a white cross. Alkire said that Clutter had positively identified to Hunter photographs of Ms.Santomero and Ms. Durian as being the women she saw in Hillsboro with a similar knife.

A red knife was entered as evidence Tuesday, along with a broken comb and the green velvet draw string bag that held them.

Clutter was living with Bobby Lee Morrison in 1983, according to Morrison's earlier testimony, and is the mother of his child.

According to defense counsel, Clutter has been called as a witness, but is out of subpoena range and refuses to travel to West Virginia to testify. Clutter will be deposed at her home by both the defense and the prosecution.

Alkire also testified Tuesday that he had walked in on an arranged meeting between Morrison and Beard at the Marlinton State Police office. Alkire said that Morrison confronted Beard with the accusation that Beard had told him what to say to police about the murders. Deputy Sheriff Bill Hall had set up the meeting, Alkire said.

The trial is continuing on Wednesday. Listen to WVMR radio for daily reports on the trial.

Defendant in Rainbow Case Granted Change of Venue

Pam Pritt

The latest development in the 13-year-old Rainbow murder case means the case's first trial will be outside Pocahontas County.

Circuit Judge Charles Lobban ruled last Thursday that the case of the State of West Virginia vs. Jacob Beard will be heard in Greenbrier County May 18. Beard and three others are accused of the 1980 murders of two young women.

Originally, Beard and six other men were arrested in mid-April of last year in connection with the homicides of Nancy Santomero, 19, and Vicky Durian, 26—the Rainbow Girls. Their bodies were found on Briery Knob, a remote hillside near Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park, June 25, 1980.

Two of the men, Johnny Lewis and Winters Charles Walton, were granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for their testimonies about the events in 1980.

In January, the Pocahontas County Grand Jury resurrected the prosecution of the murders by indicting Beard, Gerald Brown, Arnold Cutlip and Bill McCoy.

In changing the venue for Beard's trial from Pocahontas County, Lobban cited previous difficulty in seating a jury here, specifically in the Kenneth Lovelace case.

Seven witnesses were called by Bob Allen and Stephen Farmer, defense counsel for Beard, as they argued for the change. They were Gary Hissom, Doris Ann Starks, Tammy Armstrong, Bill McNeel, Janice McLaughlin, Lawrence Workman and Beth Little.

Hissom and Armstrong both appeared adamant that Beard could not get a fair trial here. McNeel said he felt it would be "difficult, but not impossible" to impanel a local jury. None of the witnesses were able to speak to the sentiments of residents of the northern part of the county, but all seemed to believe that most of the people in the southern sector had preconceived notions about the case.

The defense also filed motions of the northern part of the county, but all seemed to believe that most of the people in the southern sector had preconceived notions about the case.

The defense also filed motions to recuse the special prosecutor as a material witness in the case and to recuse him on the grounds of prosecutorial misconduct. It also made a motion to dismiss the charges against Beard because of an immunity agreement dated February 3, 1983.

In regard to the motion that he was a material witness, Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford stated that he was not a witness to any matters that others involved in the case could not testify to.

The motion to dismiss the indictments due to prosecutorial misconduct stems from the defense's allegations that the Grand Jury was improperly instructed and that Weiford was aware of several inconsistencies in the evidence that would have led to no indictment.

In 1983, Weiford was Assistant Prosecuting Attorney on a volunteer basis. Last week, he was called as a witness by the defense.

The motion to dismiss the indictments due to prosecutorial misconduct stems from the defense's allegations that the Grand Jury was improperly instructed and that Weiford was aware of several inconsistencies in the evidence that would have led to no indictment.

In 1983, Weiford was Assistant Prosecuting Attorney on a volunteer basis. Last week, he was called as a witness by the defense.

As far as the immunity agreement, Weiford said he had "no specific recollection of the agreement" and had found out about it only this year. "I was not a party to the immunity," Weiford said.

Another defense witness, Corporal Michael Jordan, West Virginia State Police Bureau of Criminal Investigations, testified that he believed the theory that convicted serial killer Joseph Paul Franklin had committed the murders. Franklin had confessed to the killings in 1984, but later denied he knew anything about them.

The defense made a motion to have Franklin brought to West Virginia to testify, but the judge denied it saying that they would have to go to Marion, Illinois where Franklin is imprisoned to take a deposition.

Alkire testified that Beard had become a suspect in the case in 1982 when an anonymous phone call to one of the victim's parents was traced to Beard. Alkire stated that when questioned, Beard first denied, then admitted that he had made the call, telling Alkire that he had done it to start up the lagging investigation.

Alkire said he asked Beard at the time if he had any information about the case. He said Beard responded that another girl in the Rainbow family and a local girl both knew who had committed the murders. Alkire said the Rainbow girl was located in Atlanta, but had no information about the murders.

Bureau of Employment Programs. Sharp was fined $100 plus $62 in court costs.

The local girl was never found, Alkire said.

He stated that Beard had asked for pictures of the girls and was asked to gather spent cartridges as evidence. According to the Sergeant's testimony, he could not recall any evidence that Beard had produced at that time.

Marilyn Thompson, defense counsel for Lewis, was called to the stand after her motion to quash her testimony was denied by the judge. She said that her client was easily intimidated. She said that Lewis had wavered about his statement saying that he had seen Beard shoot the girls.

Thompson said that she had attempted to tape record a trip to the scene of the homicide on May 1, 1992, with Lewis, Alkire and Sheriff Jerry Dale. However, Thompson said that the tape was 1992, with Lewis, Alkire and Sheriff Jerry Dale. However, Thompson said that the tape was inaudible due to faulty batteries. She said that she does have a tape of the interview between Lewis and Jordan, which reflects Lewis' recanting his statement of April 16, 1992.

According to both Thompson and Alkire, the trip to the scene involved Lewis directing them to each place he visited June 25, 1980.

The judge is expected to rule on these motions and approximately thirty others Thursday.

Brown died in March, apparently of natural causes.

The whereabouts of McCoy, who was incarcerated in Nevada on unrelated charges, is unknown. McCoy is scheduled for arraignment in Lewisburg Monday.

Ron VanReenen saves a life

The Insider, April 2

At times training, experience, preparedness and state-of-the-art equipment come together at critical times and work as they are supposed to. That is exactly what happened Wednesday evening, March 24, at Pump Station 12 when Ron VanReenen, AIGA Guard Medic, treated an employee who was experiencing chest pains.

VanReenen requested a medivac to take Dotty Smith, AGAI Guard, to a hospital for more intensive treatment because of the symptoms he recognized as a heart attack. While trying to stabilize her for the trip, she suffered cardiac arrest and her heart stopped beating three times.

The first time Smith suffered cardiac arrest, VanReenen requested assistance from Pump Station 12 Technicians Don Miller, Bryan Ford, Jerry Anderson, and Bob Poggas. Following directions from VanReenen, Miller helped hook up the new state-of-the-art cardiac monitor while others followed the medic's instructions to save her life. One shock from the cardiac monitor started her heart again.

"It wasn't long, five or ten minutes, before she went into arrest again, "said Miller. "This time it took a stronger charge to bring her back. We were working frantically trying to save her life." The monitors are a recent addition to emergency medical equipment. These portable machines are more reliable for detecting irregular heart rhythms, permitting medics to respond quickly to individual heart problems. Once stabilized, Smith did not experience any further arrests and was safely medivaced to Anchorage.

Alyeska paramedics are specially trained for and have years of experience in cardiac response situations. According to Miller, the guard medic's performance was "a work of art". "His instruction were made clear and made with total confidence," said Miller. Alyeska's commitment to maintaining medical skills like VanReenen's includes quarterly participation in busy ambulances and emergency rooms.

The training and preparedness of those who assisted was evident, according to VanReenen, "In my ambulance orientation classes, I stress the fact that one medic can't do it all," he said. "It takes a team effort in a major situation. Without the assistance of the technicians, the situation would have had grave consequences," said VanReenen. Part of the training for all pump station personnel includes emergency response teamwork which includes familiarity and use of the ambulance and its equipment.

Ron is the son of Edith McCloud and Guy VanReenen, of Marlinton, and works for the Alaskan Pipeline in Sutton, Alaska.

Civil War Stories of Slaty Fork

by Dave Sharp, Slaty Fork

I believe it was after Gen. Lee ate supper with William Sharp in the log house (still standing) that William's son, Silas, a civilian, was captured by Jake Simmons who had previously shot his 16 year old brother, Luther, also a civilian. Silas hid in a goose nest with boards over it. While a Rebel soldier was pouring powder in his rifle Silas ran past him up to the house where Jake captured him. Silas and Bill Hannah captured later in the day and who had a very small wrist were hand-cuffed together and two soldiers on horses escorted them to Libby Prison. Bill showed Silas he could slip the handcuff off. One day the soldiers stopped for a #2 call of nature and set their guns against a tree. Silas begged Bill to remove the handcuff so they could grab the guns and escape on the horses. But Bill didn't want to take the chance. Silas was in Libby Prison in Richmond and saw hundreds of starved prisoners hauled out on wagons to be buried in a common grave. People in the South were also without much food. Silas was able to make breast pins (wood?) and a black chorewoman sold them to get money to buy him extra food. When she gave a spoon of medicine he asked for two.

The captain was downright cruel. Hated by the prisoners and the guards! He ordered guards to shoot any man who stuck his head out a window. Two guards had a plan. When the Captain went in a didn't recognize him as he walked by her house. His first night at home, he couldn't sleep on a bed. He got out and slept on the floor several nights till he could get used to it.

John Gibson, father of Sam Gibson, was at William Sharp's home for Easter dinner and he, also a civilian, ran up toward the cemetery. Two soldiers were ordered to go catch him. When near the top of the hill, out of breath, he turned and pointed a pepperbox pistol and said "dangister, I'll kill you". They ran back. Later at his house he ran again while being shot at. A soldier laid his gun on a post to shoot and John's wife hit him with a bootjack and John got away. Later he got pneumonia and died.

When the Captain went in a ward, one guard shot in the air. The other guard had his gun aimed at the window. When the captain looked out to see why there was a shot, he was shot in the head. Silas told my father, L. D., that all the prisoners rejoiced! I recently came across a book on Libby Prison "Sparks from the Campfire" (1880) ..."The rule prohibiting the prisoners approaching windows...guards in expectancy with rifles cocked...An officer waving a salute his arm was shot." So, this confirms Silas' story.

Judge denies defense motions; Beard set to stand trial

Defense attempts to derail the thirteen year-old Rainbow case failed last Thursday as Circuit Judge Charles Lobban denied their major motions.

Jacob Beard will be the first of four indicted men to stand trial for the 1980 murders of Nancy Santomero and Vicky Durian. Beard's attorney, Stephen Farmer, had argued at length for four major motions that were eventually overruled.

Beard is scheduled to stand trial in Greenbrier County Circuit Court May 18.

After ruling a week earlier to grant the defense a change of venue, Lobban refused motions to dismiss the charges against Jacob Beard on the basis of a 1983 immunity agreement and to dismiss the indictment against him on the grounds of preindictment delay.

Lobban also denied motions to recuse Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford on the grounds that Weiford is a material witness in the case and to dismiss the indictments due to prosecutorial misconduct.

Lobban also denied motions to recuse Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford on the grounds that Weiford is a material witness in the case and to dismiss the indictments due to prosecutorial misconduct.

The judge ruled to allow the testimomy of Winters Charles Walton, an alleged eye-witness to the shootings, although defense motions that Walton's testimony be ruled inadmissible due to taint of hypnosis.

Beard was granted immunity in 1983 by then Prosecuting Attorney Steve Hunter if the defendant was found to be an accessory after the fact and in the instance that Beard provide the on-going investigation with information relating to the case.

However, Lobban stated that the immunity agreement does not exclude Beard being charged as a "direct perpetrator" and that he could determine no valuable information relating to the case that Beard had provided.

In regard to preindictment delay, the defense maintained that several of the witnesses they might have called have died, including Beard's father, and also that the scene of the crime has ch

The judge a cited precedent that said time begins to run with the actual arrest or formal charge issue.

Lobban said that Weiford would remain as special prosecutor since he could not testify to anything that another state agent was not aware of.

On the grounds that the indictments against Beard should be dropped due to prosecutorial misconduct, the defense said that exculpatory evidence was not presented to the Grand Jury, that Johnny Lewis, another alleged witness, was led by the prosecutor and that Lewis had presented conflicting statements about the murders, that intentional harassment of Walton had taken place by state agents, that Weiford had refused to provide known exculpatory evidence to the defense after the Grand Jury indictment, and the cumulative effect of all these matters.

Beard's attorney, claimed that exculpatory evidence in regard to Joseph Paul Franklin, the imprisoned serial killer who confessed to the murders in 1984, was not presented to the Grand Jury and that the 1983 testimony of Bobby Lee Morrison which accused Gerald Brown was also excluded.

Beard's attorney, claimed that exculpatory evidence in regard to Joseph Paul Franklin, the imprisoned serial killer who confessed to the murders in 1984, was not presented to the Grand Jury and that the 1983 testimony of Bobby Lee Morrison which accused Gerald Brown was also excluded.

Brown, who was indicted in 1983 for the murders and later released, died earlier this year, apparently of natural causes.

Defense counsel argued vehemently to have the testimonies of Winters Walton and Pamela Wilson declared inadmissible due to the taint of hypnosis. Wilson was hypnotized in January 1992 and Walton in September 1992.

However, Lobban ruled that Walton's testimony was admissible since the judge said he had seen no difference in a statement Walton made in June 1992, with his attorney present, and the videotape of his interview with the psychologist who hypnotized him.

Lobban said that Wilson would be allowed to testify only to the statement that she gave prior to being hypnotized since no videotape of her interview with the psychologist was made. Lobban said that he may exclude her testimony altogether at a later

Lobban said that Wilson would be allowed to testify only to the statement that she gave prior to being hypnotized since no videotape of her interview with the psychologist was made. Lobban said that he may exclude her testimony altogether at a later date.

Defense motions for competency hearings for Walton and Lewis were denied by the Judge. He said this was an issue to be decided by the jury.

Judge Lobban reminded the prosecution of the need to keep the defense informed of any new evidence that may be found.

Walton and Lewis were granted immunity in exchange for their cooperation with state agents and their testimonies recounting the events surrounding the murders.

The three other men indicted with Beard, Arnold Cutlip, Richard Fowler and Bill McCoy, are scheduled to stand trial this fall.

Rainbow Murder Trial Underway

Pam Pritt

The fate of Jacob Beard, the first of four indicted men to stand trial in the Rainbow Murder Case, rests in the hands of the ten men and two women selected as jurors Tuesday.

Beard, Gerald Brown, Arnold Cutlip, Richard Fowler and William McCoy are charged with two counts each of first degree murder and abduction with intent to defile in connection with the 1980 slayings of Nancy Santomero, 19, and Vicky Durian, 26.

Circuit Judge Charles Lobban denied a defense motion to have the indictments severed and Beard tried separately on each charge.

Final jury selection took approximately four hours, including individual voir dire interviews.

Opening arguments were scheduled to begin Wednesday morning. Beard's defense attorney, Stephen Farmer, said he expected his arguments to last about 45 minutes, while Special Prosecutor Walt Weiford said his comments would be "brief." Weiford said he hoped to call six witnesses Wednesday.

The trial is expected to last three weeks.

Gerald Brown died in February. The other defendants are scheduled for trial later in the year.

Dolcie Hively Celebrates 100th Birthday

Mrs. Dolcie Hively was honored by her family on March 27, 1993, in the main dining room of Pocahontas Continuous Care Center with a birthday bash.

The Continuous Care Auxiliary graciously catered the affair. The food table was adorned with finger sandwiches, meatballs, cheese balls and crackers, fresh fruit boat, and other delicious goodies.

A special table was prepared for the two birthday cakes, which were donated by Martha McCarty and Jean McClure. The dining room was gaily decorated in red and white, with arches, beautiful vases of red roses, and the tables were decorated with red carnations and what would a party be without red and white balloons!

Pictured with Mrs. Hively is resident Ella Kirby. Ella along with other residents enjoyed making Mrs. Hively a huge 100th birthday card. Mrs. Kirby stated that she would just like to shake her hand.

Many family and friends and with the residents enjoyed helping Mrs. Hively celebrate her 100th birthday. If a picture could say a thousand words, this is what it would say, "Thank you Mrs. Hively for providing this day for all of us."

Letter

Dear Editor,

Upon alertment that our highly-reputable Indian Draft Buzzard Society (IDBS) had been attacked in print, I became overwhelmed that anyone could doubt our integrity. The IDBS consultant/secretary studied Botany under the close scrutiny of Dr. Max Ward at Glenville State College and holds a valid West Virginia teaching certificate.

The IDBS was conceived by two young farmers ("Young men dream dreams; old men see visions."). The vice president and the secretary have been living together for nigh on 43 years. The president was first seen in these parts coming up the Draft with a watermelon under each arm, and the party that began is still being carried on by the young-uns and the grandyoung-uns. This old Draft can jump on special occasions!

If Woodrow Flicker (a fly-by-nighter, for sure) had researched the IDBS, he/she would have found that we had open membership about ten years ago but filled our quota of ten. When we first organized, we marked off seating after the WVU stadium pattern. Due to the flailing of arms, the waving of arms and the pointing skyward with forefingers moving in concentric circles, we must allow about six times more space for a person than a stadium allows for a person, and our space is limited.

In an executive session on April 12, the IDBS voted to give Woodrow Flicker its official imprimatur to watch buzzard over Caesar Mountain. Keep up the good work, BEAK. The IDBS

Memorial Service

A Memorial Service was held June 6, 1976, at one o' clock at Droop Mountain State Park by Lobelia Rebekah Lodge No. 38 conducted by Second Avenue and Ninth Street. At 2 p. m., the eight class parade will start on Ninth Street. The categories are horse and rider, horse or oxen drawn cart, walking pioneer themes, commercial entries and decorated bicycles. Trophies and cash prizes will be awarded in all classes. Following the parade, an antique car show, mountain music contest and square dance will conclude the day's events.

At 1:30 p. m. on Sunday, July 11, a fifteen class horse show is scheduled at Marlinton's new stock yards. In the evening, Pioneer Days will conclude with a special Bicentennial worship service.

As usual, gourmets will delight in several tasty meals (ham and biscuits, barbequed chicken, etc.) Also the Pocahontas Times office, the County Museum, Old Log Church and the Pearl S. Buck Birthplace are historic sites open to the public.

For the price of a $1.00 badge, a tourist can enjoy most of these events. For a free brochure, contact: Pioneer Days, 218 Eighth Street, Marlinton, W. V.

Memorial Day weekend was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hockenberry where their son, Bill Hockenberry and their children, Mrs. Anne Wallace, and family of Point Pleasant.

able: Monday-Saturday 9-5; Sunday 1-5 p. m.

Pioneer Home Sites Located

Below is a list of the locations of the sites of homes of the pioneers of Pocahontas County that Sam Hill has received to date. Sam reports that interest in locating and recording the home sites of the early pioneer settlers of the Revolutionary War period seems to be increasing so keep the letters coming. They are all informative. It is interesting to note that more than half of those received to date are from people living out of the County, so we local folks need to get busy.

A decision must soon be reached as to the type and cost of marker to be placed on the public road near each site. A decision on the part of the descendants of each pioneer as to placing a bronze plaque on the site must also be made.

This project will be the main topic for the next meeting of the Pocahontas County Historical Society on June 28. It is hoped a decision on the type of markers can be made then.

In the following list the name of pioneer is given, the home site, and the name of the person sending the information.

Anyone who is a descendant of the early pioneers of Pocahontas County of the Revolutionary Period or anyone who has knowledge of the location of their cabins or homes is asked to write to Sam Hill, Hillpoint, Hillsboro, W. Va. 24946. Mr. Hill is working on a Pocahontas Bicentennial project to mark the locations of the early cabins and farm homes. Some people have given him some information verbally but he wold like to have it written. Sometimes verbal details are forgotten.

A report on the progress of this project and information on possible markers will be given at the next meeting of the Pocahontas

School Bond Fails

It would be beneficial to give our children reared in Pocahontas County a safe and thorough education. Perhaps we could be more realistic about possibilities. For 6,700 persons to go in debt 2.8 million dollars is quite extravagant and would result in modern schools which are often shoddily built and show the cracks of age in just a few years. Are these old buildings as irreparable as is made out? In Europe 800 year old buildings prevail. Why not pass a School Bond for $600,000 to repair the existing schools and add to the taxpayers burden the permanent expense of a larger maintenance crew. At this time there are add to the taxpayers burden the permanent expense of a larger maintenance crew. At this time there are only 2 men to handle all the schools in the county. There need to be at least 5, possibly 6 men, for effective maintenance. Even the best buildings in the world will fall apart if not taken care of.

My mother has been a teacher for 24 years, both in the old schools and in the modern buildings. She says she appreciates the high ceilings in the old classrooms because they reduce the noise factor considerably, allow more air space for the 32 students and teacher.

The general credit market is in a squeeze and it is already too late to go deep in debt. Our existing schools are all right. If the roofs need fixed, let's fix them. If the drains are clogged, let's dig them out. If the chimneys need fixed,

SNOWSHOE

By Rosalie Earle
Staff Writer

The Charleston Gazette,

A general manager can't be found for Snowshoe because a "jack-of-all-trades" is needed to run the bankrupt ski resort.

Thomas Denny, trustee for Snowshoe, said Monday that he has made numerous, unsuccessful attempts to employ a full-time manager.

In a hearing before U.S. Bankruptcy Judge John Copenhaver, Denny also described in detail the maintenance operations at the Pocahontas County resort.

Denny reported to the court that Estill and Greenlee Inc., a Charleston real estate firm, has been employed to do a study on constructing a hotel or motel in the vicinity of the resort.

He said the real estate firm will look into the feasibility of building a 200 to 300-unit complex there. Under the agreement, Estill and Greenlee will be paid $6,000 plus expenses, according to Denny.

In addition, he said the firm will prepare a land use and marketing plan for developing the first portion of the individual home sites at Snowshoe. Both reports, Denny said, will be due June 28.

CONCERNING a general manager, Denny explained that the resort's contract with Murray Dearborn of Elkins expired March 31. Dearborn has managed the state-owned ski resort at Canaan Valley in Tucker County for several years.

Denny said the contract with Dearborn was a temporary measure the past winter and a full-time manager is needed at Snowshoe.

The trustee for the multimillion-dollar resort said a manager must have experience in construction, in operating food and beverage concessions, and in marketing and advertising.

Most people who have worked with ski areas in the West aren't qualified because they have no experience in the snowmaking process, said Denny.

In return, Denny explained, he can't offer a potential manager a long-term contract because of the resort's troubled financial status.

IN THE MEANTIME, Denny said, general repairs are being made to the three ski lifts. He said work is being done to improve the drainage on basin slopes.

Denny also told Judge Copenhaver that negotiations are continuing with Monongahela Power Co. to lower Snoshoe's electric bill. The minimum monthly charge to the resort for power is $6,648, said Denny.

He said the problem was that the power company's rate schedule isn't flexible enough to handle Snowshoe's larger power usage during the winter months and its minimal usage during the warm season.

Denny said Snowshoe has already paid more than $90,000 for power during the four-month period of December through March.

Mrs. David Sharpes and Mrs. Glenn Shrader were hostesses for the meeting of the Woman's Club of Marlinton, at the home of Mrs. Sharpes on Brown's Creek Road, Friday night, May 14, 1976, at 8 p. m.

Mrs. Steve Hunter, president, presided. A responsive reading—Assuming the Responsibility—was led by Mrs. Richard Newkirk.

Following the business meeting, a program on Americana was given. Each member displayed an antique or some article of nostalgic or historical interest. Many interesting things were shown during the "Show and Tell." Among the presentations were clothing, jewelry, china, silver, furniture, pictures, music box, books, old valentine, hand-woven tablecloth, old sunglasses that had been given to the great grandfather of Mrs. L. E. Montgomery by Horace Greeley, baskets, old vanity set, and an interesting mug with the name of Mr. J. W. Milligan who was born in England. Mr. Milligan was the maternal grandfather of Mrs. Jane Price Sharp. Mrs. John Sharp showed a beautiful large formation of coral which was found in the Jerico Road area of Marlinton.

A card was signed by all members to send Mrs. John Pritchard who is ill and is a patient in a

A Point in Cass History

About the turn of the century a young man moved his family to Cass. There were several boys in the family and more sons were born to the man and his wife. They were the parents of thirteen, twelve sons and one daughter.

This man was readily accepted into the growing town of Cass. He was just what the town needed—a preacher.

When his sons were big enough to help, they played a major part in the growth and development of the town.

The preacher knew that God had blessed him beyond any of his hopes and dreams.

As the sons grew their father coached them in the Christian way of life and educated them in the local schools. Later some left the area for higher learning and different and better employment. Only three remained in Cass.

One of the three grew to be a Sunday School teacher in one of the Methodist Churches. He was also a school teacher in the Green Bank school. He was a part time writer and wrote some books, of which some are still available.

The sons were very successful in life and the preacher retired, a very happy man.

In the years after he retired from the ministry, his great delight was to have some one visit him. On some visits he would take the visitor up to the third floor to his study. There he could relax and talk. He instructed many people in his conversations while in his study.

His son set up a trophy room; he mounted birds and animals. The preacher

There he could relax and talk. He instructed many people in his conversations while in his study.

His son set up a trophy room; he mounted birds and animals. The preacher was very proud to show his son's work. He was very proud of all his children. He had good reason to be proud.

Each one of the preacher's sons was an inspiration to most anyone who came in contact with them. They helped the poor and needy. They counseled the troubled and lived very useful lives. Many are still living.

The preacher was well into his eighties when he passed away. Anyone still living who remembers him will say that the preacher left his footprints on the sands of time. He was the well known and much loved Rev. Harry Blackhurst.

PHILADELPHIA—Dorothy Callison O'Donnell, a native of Hillsboro, W. Va., will entertain Queen Elizabeth at a mid-afternoon reception Wednesday in historic Carpenters Hall here.

Ms. O'Donnell will perform with the group she founded. The Committee of Correspondence, a musical ensemble specializing in traditional American folk music of the 18th century. For Wednesday's presentation the artists will be costumed in authentic colonial dress.

A longtime student of native folk music, Ms. O'Donnell began performing for civic and community groups in West Virginia with her father, the late Eric Clutter, a former professor at West Virginia Tech. In addition, the duo broadcast a radio program in Ronceverte, singing Appalachian ballads and playing stringed instruments.

Ms. O'Donnell later joined the State Commerce Department where she employed folk music to promote the West Virginia Centennial. She traveled to New England to work as a balladeer in an English-style pub and to perform as a madrigal singer at the American Shakespeare Festival in Stratford. She also hosted a folk music show for the Canadian Broadcasting Co. and originated a series of children's programs for the network.

Ms. O'Donnell made the transition to colonial music two years ago, completing extensive research on Revolutionary War songs. She settled in Philadelphia and formed The Committee of Correspondence, naming the ensemble after colonial

RESTORED GRIST MILL AT BABCOCK PARK

BY REX WOODFORD
Of The Daily Mail Staff

Water splashing softly into the louvers of a huge wheel that turns a grinding mechanism to produce corn and buckwheat meal and flour signaled the opening two weeks ago of the state's latest tourist attraction.

It is an old, old grist mill, reassembled in a picturesque setting at Babcock State Park near Clifftop in Fayette County and it is already drawing hundreds of visitors.

The mill was torn down piece by piece at its original location on Stoney Creek in Pocahontas County and hauled to the new site along Glade Creek across from the park administration building.

A father and son team, Fred and Jerry Kyles of Ronceverte, patiently dismantled the 2½ story building and then supervised its re-erection, mostly from memory.

Retired carpenter Owen Ellis, 72, of Danese was brought in to do most of the fitting, using wooden pegs and cut nails to make the restoration as authentic as possible.

A major problem was solved when wavy, flawed glass to replace missing panes was found at a lumber company being dismantled at Rainelle. Clear glass light bulbs suepended from the ceilings add to the turn of the centuty appearance.

A crayon marking on the inside of the mill's front door attests to its age. It reads "1890." Rod Taylor, former naturalist at the park who is now the attendant at the mill, says there are only about a dozen mills left in the state but at the turn of the

A crayon marking on the inside of the mill's front door attests to its age. It reads "1890." Rod Taylor, former naturalist at the park who is now the attendant at the mill, says there are only about a dozen mills left in the state but at the turn of the century there were 580.

Glade Creek was the site of a mill in times past and some of the oldtimers visiting the current one remember that it stood only a few yards downstream from the present one and was known as Cooper's Grist Mill.

Park Supt. Clyde Crowley says the mill will retain it's original look and the public is allowed to tour it without charge. Souvenir bags of the meal and flour ground there will be offered for sale.

Water power comes from the mountain in back of the mill and is channeled througha wooden flume to the power wheel.

A new bridge with plank floor provides access across Glade Creek.

The mill is closed on Mondays.

Northern West Virginia State Band Festival

On May 6, 7, 8, the Pocahontas County High School Band attended the Northern West Virginia State Band Festival in Clarksburg. This festival was sponsored by the West Virginia Secondary Schools Activities Association. Each band participating was rated in concert by three adjudicators. The five rating plan was used.

Rating 1. Superior—This division represents the finest conceivable performance for the event and the class of participants being judged worthy of the distinction of being recognized as among the very best.

Rating 2. Excellent—This rating reflects an unusual performance in many respects but not worthy of the highest rating due to minor defects. Yet it is a performance of distinctive quality.

Rating 3. Good—This rating is awarded for good performance, but one that is not outstanding. The performance shows accomplishment and marked promise, but is lacking in one or more essential qualities.

Rating 4. Fair—This rating describes a performance that shows obvious weakness. This may reflect process that will take several months.

All parties involved have until February 11 to file appeals to this initial decision. If any appeals are filed then the case will proceed to further hearings before the ICC in a lengthy process that will take several months.

If no appeals are filed, the ICC decision is published in the Federal Register and the final certificate of abandonment is issued 30 days following. In this case the final certificate could come by April.

As far as we know now none of the local protestants to the abandonment are planning an appeal.

Ironically, the C&O may appeal the decision itself as it objects to one provision. In rendering his decision, Judge Alprin granted the abandonment, subject to the employee protection conditions specified in a rail abandonment case in Oregon early last year. The unions believe these provisions give them the right to negotiate the future of any rail workers involved with the railroad before the abandonment becomes final.

jects to one provision. In rendering his decision, Judge Alprin granted the abandonment, subject to the employee protection conditions specified in a rail abandonment case in Oregon early last year. The unions believe these provisions give them the right to negotiate the future of any rail workers involved with the railroad before the abandonment becomes final.

All ICC judges have included the Oregon conditions in all abandonment cases since decided, and the Chessie system (C&O, B&O, and W. M.), in turn, has objected to every decision, according to John Killoran, Exeutive Director of the W. Va. Railroad Maintenance Authority. "The C&O feels that the provision in effect gives the unions a veto over every abandonment. If they don't like the deal they get from the railroad, they object and stall the abandonment."

At present the ICC Commissioners are debating whether the Oregon conditions should stand. A decision either way will undoubtedly bring an objection in this case, Killoran said.

If the ICC says the Oregon conditions are valid, the C&O will object. If they are not allowed to stand, then the union will object.

Almighty and merciful Father, we have often forsaken your way and walked too much in the way of the world. SCHOOL BOND PASSES!

Pocahontas voters Tuesday approved the School Bond Issue to build a consolidated high school with a vote of 2570 for and 1166 against, a favorable percentage of sixty-eight and seven-tenths percent. This is a good majority and shows unusual support for a first vote. After staying up all night to hear the results, Superintendent Cassell thanks the people for their support and will have more to say next week.

Are Panthers Coming Back

I have heard my parents tell stories of panthers in the days gone by. How panthers would sometimes follow people at night, usually keeping a few yards behind the person they were following; then when the person stopped because they thought they heard something following them, the panther would stand still but would pat its tail on the leaves. I imagine this would give anyone quite a scare.

There was also the story about a man riding his horse on a road through a thickly wooded area. As he passed under a limb overhanging the road a panther jumped from the limb at the man but missed him and instead the panther's claw raked over the horses hip leaving deep cuts which probably was a good topic of conversation for quite a time.

Lately several people in the Back Mountain area have seen animals which they think are panthers. (The older people would probably know for sure if they saw a panther but the younger generation is not used to seeing panthers running around loose.) Some people also have lambs missing and think that it could very well be a panther taking the lambs if there is really any in this section of the country.

Sincerely
Allie Smith

The Old Timer

until recently topkick of a company in the 1st Air Cavalry. He's now in a back zone job.

From a place it calls "Landing Zone Jane," the Army writes:

"Funkhouser was always out in the boondocks, climbing the hills with his troops." Clearly he enjoyed it. Though alert and cautious, he always seemed to have a good time. He carried a supply of C-ration coffee and any rest break was turned into a coffee session.

He left the field periodically for short trips to the rear. He said he had to "beat the clerks over the head" and make sure things were running smoothly from that end.

Frequently he would summon his company clerk to the field and they would find a quiet spot on a mound of dirt or in a foxhole, and "take care of the paper work."

"In his backpack Sergeant Funkhouser toted a small file to remind him of such things as the dates men were due for rest and recovery leave."

Recently Funkhouser was made first sergeant for battalion headquarters company which removed him from the field.

"I miss the troops, the smoking and joking," he said. "To me it was a challenge to be out there and work directly with the men."

Sergeant Funkhouser was drafted in 1951 and went into the Korean War as a corporal. He emerged as an acting platoon leader.

After reading this article, see what came in the mail:

Are Panthers Coming Back

I have heard my parents tell stories of panthers in the days gone by. How panthers would sometimes follow people at night, usually keeping a few yards behind the person they were following; then when the person stopped because they thought they heard something following them, the panther would stand still but would pat its tail on the leaves. I imagine this would give anyone quite a scare.

There was also the story about a man riding his horse on a road through a thickly wooded area. As he passed under a limb overhanging the road a panther jumped from the limb at the man but missed him and instead the panther's claw raked over the horses hip leaving deep cuts which probably was a good topic of conversation for quite a time.

Lately several people in the Back Mountain area have seen animals which they think are panthers. (The older people would probably know for sure if they saw a panther but the younger generation is not used to seeing panthers running around loose.) Some people also have lambs missing and think that it could very well be a panther taking the lambs if there is really any in this section of the country.

Sincerely
Allie Smith

until recently topkick of a company in the 1st Air Cavalry. He's now in a back zone job.

From a place it calls "Landing Zone Jane," the Army writes:

"Funkhouser was always out in the boondocks, climbing the hills with his troops." Clearly he enjoyed it. Though alert and cautious, he always seemed to have a good time. He carried a supply of C-ration coffee and any rest break was turned into a coffee session.

He left the field periodically for short trips to the rear. He said he had to "beat the clerks over the head" and make sure things were running smoothly from that end.

Frequently he would summon his company clerk to the field and they would find a quiet spot on a mound of dirt or in a foxhole, and "take care of the paperwork."

"In his backpack Sergeant Funkhouser toted a small file to remind him of such things as the dates men were due for rest and recovery leave."

Recently Funkhouser was made first sergeant for battalion headquarters company which removed him from the field.

"I miss the troops, the smoking and joking," he said. "To me it was a challenge to be out there and work directly with the men."

Sergeant Funkhouser was drafted in 1951 and went into the Korean War as a corporal. He emerged as an acting platoon leader.

Sunday morning they heard someone yelling "hello" through the drilled hole and they all yelled back; Junior crawled down to the hole—now clear of water—but couldn't make them hear. Due to mapping mistakes, this hole luckily hadn't hit the intended No. 1 room; it would have relieved the air pocket and probably drowned them; another previous mapping error had caused the initial tragic break through.

On Monday the water was down low so they went 400 feet to the swag where the water was still to the roof. Joe Fitzwater passed out here, probably due to black damp

Thursday from 11:55 until 4 they heard the drilling; afterwards they were told that only water was found. At 4:30 they ate the last sandwich and drank the last fresh water.

Sunday morning they heard someone yelling "hello" through the drilled hole and they all yelled back; Junior crawled down to the hole—now clear of water—but couldn't make them hear. Due to mapping mistakes, this hole luckily hadn't hit the intended No. 1 room; it would have relieved the air pocket and probably drowned them; another previous mapping error had caused the initial tragic break through.

On Monday the water was down low so they went 400 feet to the swag where the water was still to the roof. Joe Fitzwater passed out here, probably due to black damp, and they had to drag him back on a shovel.

Monday evening at 3:30 Martin filled the water jugs at the No. 3 room and Junior crawled down to the swag, came back the belt corridor and got a first aid kit; he saw one body at that time.

Tuesday they went to the swag and the water was still dropping but after that they stayed in the "tent" to save their energy.

Stafford Sharp and sons, Joey and David, of Akron, Ohio, visited his mother, Mrs. Lola Sharp, at Clover Lick, over the weekend.

Lynch gave thanks to God for the water; they dozed off and at 5 after one they woke to hear two men talking—Roy Simmons and Kermit Stanley. They hollered at them, Roy hollered back. When he stuck his head through the "tent" they all hugged him. He went back for stretchers and help but they wanted none of that; they all crawled the 800 feet to a buggy. Simmons telephoned outside and Frank Davis called the families. Larry Lynch, Scarbro and Junior were in the first buggy and Fitzwater, Lilly and Gene Martin in the last buggy. They

They had coffee at the drift mouth, and then soup, cereal and black coffee at the hospital and reunion with their happy families.

The Preamble to the United Nations charter states that the people of the United Nations are determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war. By negotiating with other countries they are trying to prevent wars and trying to uphold the standards of living and human rights.

The United Nations is a World Peace Organization where disputes between nations can be solved peacefully and without warfare. The United Nations is devoted to settling many other problems besides national conflict. The Economic and Social Council is trying to improve the standards of living, health and education, and are promoting respect for human rights and freedoms throughout the world. The Trusteeship Council is striving to protect the interests of people who are in non-self-governing or trust areas and are trying to lead them to self-government and independence.

The United Nations is an association of independent natural states and was formed by the victorious nations of World War II. Recreation

A bus will leave for Watoga State Park from Marlinton High School each Monday beginning July 1, at 1:00 p. m., and will begin its return trip at approximately 4:00 p. m., which will put them back to Marlinton around 5:00 p. m.

Due to limited transportation, it has been necessary that the recreation director place an age limit riding the bus. The age range is 10 to 15 years If we find that we can handle more children, we will expand this age range.

Transportation will be furnished without charge, but all park fees must be paid by the individual such as fees for swimming and participating in the recreation area, if so desired.

All persons riding the bus to Watoga will be under the direct supervision of David McLaughlin, Marlinton, Recreation Supervisor.

Amendments

We publish this week two amendments to be voted on in the fall election: the Modern Budget Amendment and the Roads Improvement Amendment. This is your official notice and the full text is published only this time. The first provides for the Governor to be responsible for the budget and the second provides for the sale of bonds for the building of roads.

Pioneering in Old Pokey Wagon Trains

By Billy Hill (pen name)

In this fast moving jet age, the race to reach the moon, cars built to do 120 miles per hour on highways with 50 and 60 mile limits, we seldom if ever think of the modes of travel and transportation of yesteryear. Few people now living were a part of the scene when the horse and wagons slogging through axle deep mud at the rate of 5 or 6 miles in a long day, were a way of life and the only means of transportation in isolated areas such as the Little Levels around 1900 and before.

miles in a long day, were a way of life and the only means of transportation in isolated areas such as the Little Levels around 1900 and before.

The story of the horse and wagon, of wagon trains, is the story of our civilization. Writers have glamorized the wagon trains of the "Old West," The Oregon Trail, The Chisolm Trail, with an aura of romance which it is doubtful they ever enjoyed.

We are concerned, in this article, with the wagon trains right here in our own Pocahontas County.

About 1900 the C&O Rail-Road was pushing its two "steel snakes" up the crooked old Greenbrier from Whitcomb to Winterburn, a distance of some 97 miles. The scars of battle were still most vivid on the Droop Mountain battle field, where the cannon balls of only thirty five years before had left gaunt tree snags as grim reminders of this country's most destructive conflict. Local nimrods were chopping Minie balls from the downed tree trunks and remolding them into rifle balls. I still have one of these Minie balls, also two still wrapped in the original field, where the cannon balls of only thirty five years before had left gaunt tree snags as grim reminders of this country's most destructive conflict. Local nimrods were chopping Minie balls from the downed tree trunks and remolding them into rifle balls. I still have one of these Minie balls, also two still wrapped in the original brown paper, never fired. The scream of panthers was a common sound in the night on Viney Mountain and surrounding hills.

Going back still further, the Droop Mountain battle field was the site of a large concentration of Indians, who, as the story goes, burned off what is now the Little Levels area to attract game. On one occasion my brother and I picked up more than a gallon of arrow heads in a few hours on what is now the Droop Mountain State Park, and there was a cave nearby that had evidently been used as a factory by the Indians to make arrowheads, spearheads and tommyhawks; there were large quantities of flint chips, imperfect arrowheads, etc. also chunks of flint stones. Local nimrods were chopping Minie balls from the downed tree trunks and remolding them into rifle balls. I still have one of these Minie balls, also two still wrapped in the original brown paper, never fired. All "store boughten" goods had to be hauled by wagon from the nearest railhead, which was Ronceverte, roughly, and I do mean roughly, 40 miles to the south. The bulk of the hauling was done in the summer and fall when the road had a bottom, but seasonal goods made it necessary to do do much of it in the spring. Many farmers in the area made the trip to bring back needed material and goods for their own and neighbor's use. Now in dead of winter or late spring, there was a planned trip—planned for the benefit of all. While the outfits made the down trip either singly or two's and three's, they made it a point to return as a caravan or wagon train. All outfits consisted of at least four horses, some had six. He was at least seven feet tall and no shoes were made to fit him. Either Mr. Curry or Henry Adkison, the two shoemakers there, would make his shoes, which he seldom wore. He would wrap his feet in so many rags and gunny sacks that every time he made a track it looked like a bale of hay had up set. There was a story going the rounds about that time that a teamster came up to one of the mud holes and saw a man's head sticking out. He stopped his team and asked the guy "Is that the depth of the mud?" the man answered "Yep," so the wagoner drove into the edge and went down. He struggled upon the wagon seat and said "Thought you

From time to time you hear older people comment about the seasons. Such as "By Grannies, you young whipper snappers don't know what winter is, why, I mind....." Well, I mind when these wagon trains would make the trip in dead of winter with bob sleds instead of wagons. They would put wagon bodies with high side boards on and take off on the trip that often took more than a week to make. I only remember one instance when a freak thaw stranded them. Winter would come on about December 1st, and you wouldn't see bare ground until March. If the snow did melt before then, people were concerned. They would say, "A green winter, a fat graveyard."

This is a drawing of a swimming pool proposed to be built in Marlinton. Friday night it was decided to form a non-profit corporation and seek 150 to 350 member families who will pledge $100 initial stock and will agree to pay about $45 a year membership fees for swimming. The proposed pool would be 42x82 feet main pool with a 35x40 diving well; the plan also includes a kiddie pool, sundeck, bath house and concession space. Enough members must first be secured and they will meet to elect directors and make final decisions. If you are interested contact Fred Smith at the Board of Education Office.

Yes, these were strange new sights and sounds in these diggins'. Many people in Pocahontas had never seen a railroad or a train.

The coming of the railroad brought many changes, some good—some bad. It was the end of an era of unhurried tranquility, a gracious leisurely way of life, and the beginning of a new era of stepped up activity—a wider range of travel and a changing economy.

The coming of the railroad tapped (and destroyed) the natural resources of timber in Pocahontas, coal in Randolph and Barbour Counties, and opened up the Eastern and Southern markets to these commodities.

Before and after the last log drive, I believe in 1899, things began to happen along the old Greenbrier River. The river not only served as a transportation route for timber, but also for passengers. Before the summer drouth reduced the river to a mere trickle when a thirsty mule could drink it dry, the business dignitaries of Marlinton would "float" trip to Ronceverte and a "rig" would meet them for the return trip by land, over what is now Route 219—the Seneca Trail.

Some of the passengers on these large boats were: Captain Smith (don't ask me how he came by the title), Jim Smith, his son, Walker Yeager, some of the Denning & Whiting Lumber people and others. They always made it to our place (Uncle George Clendenen's) the first night. I will never forget one such occasion.

The engineer, the Rev. Mr. Sampson, with long flowing beard, mustache and snow white hair, was sitting on the bank watching the four huge colored men driving spikes and listening to their melodious songs—to the rhythm of their hammer blows. Who remembers the Rev. Sampson, engineer on the regular passenger train for many years? He came to Seebert on many Sundays and preached in the grove there. His fireman told a story about him cussing cattle on the track. You would hear a series of short toots on the whistle and you knew the Reverend had caught up with a cow again.

The first passenger train to come up the track, I believe was a free ride to all. Marlin ton was t e end of the road and I was sent on the train to the "big town" to bring back a big supply of groceries. These were also hauled in the baggage car free. Quite a few years later I hosteled engines at Cass and Durbin on this same old "two streaks of rust," and have outlived a part of the railroad itself. I have always loved railroads and love to ride on trains, but it looks like the beginning of the end for them. Super highways, millions of automobiles, airplanes (passenger and cargo) are signing the deathknell of trains. Even the plush Vistadome, air conditioned trains like the El Capitan, the California Zephyrs, Super Chief, Capitol Limited and the C&O's FFV have had to curtail their facilities. Some

Pioneer Religion

Religious life was an important part of Pioneer living so it is fitting that the final day (Sunday) of Pioneer Days should begin and end with religious services. Meet at 8 a. m. at the High School for an inspirational devotional at Elk Overlook from 8:30 to 9. Then in the evening from 7:30 to 8:30 on the Museum Grounds, there will be an old fashioned Camp Meeting and Hymn Sing, such as gave our forefathers strength to overcome the great handicaps in developing this mountain area. In case of rain the evening service will be in the Marlinton Presbyterian Church.

Religious life was an important part of Pioneer living so it is fitting that the final day (Sunday) of Pioneer Days should begin and end with religious services. Meet at 8 a. m. at the High School for an inspirational devotional at Elk Overlook from 8:30 to 9. Then in the evening from 7:30 to 8:30 on the Museum Grounds, there will be an old fashioned Camp Meeting and Hymn Sing, such as gave our forefathers strength to overcome the great handicaps in developing this mountain area. In case of rain the evening service will be in the Marlinton Presbyterian Church.

It was about 1897 or '98 that the writer went to stay with "Uncle George and Aunt Lou" Clendenen, who acted as my foster parents. There were only three families living directly on the river where the town of Seebert (named for Uncle George's ancestors) now stands: Uncle George's home and those of William Clendenen, and Aunt Sally Clendenen up at the mouth of Stamping Creek. I had never seen a river much less an ice break-up previous to that time My first spring there, Uncle George had stashed away a huge pile of dry wood on the river bank, anticipating a night break-up, which was when it did happen.

Torrential rains for days had swollen the river to ice bursting capacity, and when it came Uncle George awakened me and we went to the river bank where he built up a huge fire. It was pouring rain down, with about the worst electrical storm I have ever seen. It was the biggest and most spectacular and scary show I had ever seen. Cakes of ice more

It was the biggest and most spectacular and scary show I had ever seen. Cakes of ice more than a foot thick, and large enough to build a small house on were "walking" on edge in this crashing, grinding, maelstrom, grinding trees and everything in their path into pulpwood. My greatest concern was that this awful thing would surely kill every horney chub in the river and thus finish my fishing for all time. It didn't.

After the ice was cleared out of the river and the days of rain that followed, the loggers all the way from Ronceverte started trekking up river to hire out for the log drive which they knew would follow. By the second day the river was floating pretty full of logs, and as the logs increased in number one knew that the "Arks" (the floating lumber camps) were getting closer. That was my second big thrill, and I lost no time boarding the big cookhouse as soon as it was tied up at the old catrock in Seebert. The cook-house served four big (and I Do mean big) meals a day. There were three "Arks", cookhouse, stable and blacksmith combined, and lobby-bunk house. They always tied up at Seebert over night. When the jam let go, with a thundering roar, you never expected the poor devils to come out alive, but when the smoke cleared each one of them was riding a single log to the bunkhouse, where they stayed until another jam showed up.

Huge horses were used to haul the logs from the slough back into the river, and these horses were transported in large boats to and from the stable.

Yours truly is probably the only living "goof" who ever stowed away on a river "Ark." I practically lived on the cookhouse, while it was tied up there, and begged them to take me along, and when they refused I stowed away on it one time. Mr. Barnhouse was a big attraction with his split wood shingles, Mrs. Russell K. Hannah brought maple sugar and syrup, Mrs. Lloyd Woods churned butter, Mrs. Humes made splitbottom chair seats; there are many more crafts which should have been demonstrated

Fred Trainer and his animals got a good reception, and the horseshoe pitching and woodchopping contests provided good watching. The mountain rifle shoot was more popular than ever and the music contest had more entries.

Mr. and Mrs. Clabe Kellison were again the oldest couple (combined ages) registered.

Local artists exhibiting were Miss Edith May, Mrs. William del Guidice, Bill Davis, Glenn Hefner, Tommy May, Ann McNeel, Si Sharp, Mrs. Mabel Woods Nelson. These compared well with a much appreciated exhibit on loan from the Charleston Art Gallery. Another outside contribution was the Mountain State Story, hist-

Schools

The six rooms of the top floor of the Marlinton Graded School have been condemned and cannot be used next year. Repairs to the first floor and basement to meet the Fire Marshal's requirements will cost $15,000 to $16,000. The Board decided to sell all buildings not being used, including the Marlinton Elementary School and land. If sufficient funds are obtained by this sale of property to purchase classroom space by next year, this is the way the Board will move. If bids are not sufficient to do this, the Board will have to seek other classrooms.

Lloyd Waugh submitted his retirement as a bus driver; Lloyd has been a bus driver and mechanic for the Board of Education for 35 years and during that time never had a chargeable accident.

Mrs. Florence Bailey offered her resignation as she is moving to Elkins.

Preliminary school plans were presented and tentatively approved pending cost estimate to be presented July 9.

The Board accepted the low bid of Marlinton Electric Company for gas and oil for the next year.

AN UNCHURCHED POPULATION

We are told that at the end of every year in America "there are one million more unchurched people than when the year began." The population explosion accounts for some of this. We are concerned that new witness points shall be established to meet increasing spiritual need. At the beginning of 1966 the population of West Virginia was estimated to be 1,812,000. Approximately 1 1-4 millions of these are not affiliated with any church. There have been Southern Baptist churches in the State since the Convention was oryanized in 1845. In the 1860's most of the Baptist churches in West Virginia withdrew from the Southern Baptist Convention and later joined the Northern Baptist Convention when it was organized in 1907. There are now 55 churches and 14 chapels in the State affiliated with Southern Baptists. It will be the task of these churches to start others.

A full - time director of the information and referral service bureau of the Community Council of Kanawha Valley has put the agency's helping hand in better shape than ever.

John W. McGowan, CCKV executive director, referred to the staff appointment of Miss Dorothea McLaughlin, who has been on loan with the agency from her position as a medical social worker in the State Health Department.

Miss McLaughlin resigned from her position with the department, effective March 29, to become permanent director of the CCKV bureau.

"We are devoting practically all of our time now to getting out the community services directory which has been in the making for a year," she said Tuesday. "We are going to press around May 1."

The initial printing calls for 2,200 copies of the directory which will list the various social services available in Kanawha Valley, she explained. The directory will be distributed to doctors, school officers and others in public and private agencies.

The directory grows out of a recommendation of a study sponsored by the Ford Foundation. The United Fund included money in the CCKV budget to prepare and print the directory.

"WE BELIEVE we have a good product," Miss McLaughlin said. "There are 267 entries on direct services to people. We have many services listed such as consultative services and others offered by various clubs and institutions.

"For example, the Colin Anderson Center sponsors a club for parents and others interested in help and programs for mentally retarded children," she added.

Aside from her work with the bureau, the former WAF captain conducts a weekly class on alcoholism for the Kanawha County Alcoholism Information Center.

The group meets at 7:30 p. m. Wednesday at 410 Kanawha Blvd. E. The weekly sessions began in February.

"We started out with the families of alcoholics and now the group sessions include alcoholics themselves," Miss McLaughlin explained.

Attendance has averaged about 17 participants in the weekly sessions, she said. More persons can be accommodated in the program sponsored by the State Mental Health Department.

"Group sessions may involve as many as 500 persons in dealing with problems of alcoholism," Miss McLaughlin said.

The Arecibo Ionospheric Observatory's 1000-ft. telescope (lower) in Puerto Rico, participated in earlier VLB experiments.

Green Bank, West Virginia, April 3,—Fifteen scientists from six U. S. institutions and Sweden reported today, at a meeting of the American Astronomical Society in Charlottesville, Virginia, on the results of two experiments peformed in late January 1968 between four radio telescopes located in North America and Europe. The net effect was to provide astronomers with a radio telescope having a resolution power equal to an antenna stretching from California to Sweden, or very nearly the diameter of the earth.

One experiment measured the angular diameters of more than a dozen radio sources at 6 cm and 18 cm wavelengths, most of which were quasars, intrinsically bright radio sources that may be located at the far extremeties of the observable universe. The other experiment performed at the 18 cm wavelength of the OH (hydroxyl) molecule measured the angular size of peculiar speck-like sources of radiation found near the edge of the radio source W.3, a large mass of glowing hydrogen gas 6000 light years from the earth in the constellation of Cassiopeia.

The technique of using antennae widely separated on the earth is very new. It was developed only a year ago by the National Radio Astronomy Observatory in collaboration with scientist from Arecibo, P. R., Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the University of California, San Diego.

Among the participants were B. G. Clark, K. J. Kellermann, and C. Bare, of the National Radio Astronomy Observatory at Green Bank.

The flags were up along the street as I rode to the airport to leave Beirut and go to Athens and there was a crowd gathering. I really didn't believe they were doing this for me; it seems the President of Lebanon was going on an official visit to Jordan and his private plane and Olympic jet I was traveling on were scheduled to leave at the same time.

Two hours to Athens was long enough to leave beautiful sunny weather and get into rain, the only inclement weather I encountered other than during my longer stay in Taiwan.

I had only half a day in Athens so things had to be seen in a hurry. I took a taxi to the Acropolis, and took the first guide who stepped forward; it so happened he was the best guide on the hill and almost inexhaustible as to both knowledge and talking endurance. It poured rain but he was so enthusiastic and so imbued with the responsibility of being a good ambassador from the people of Greece to the people of the United States—through me—that we got wet and didn't mind it. I only wish I could remember all of it.

The Acropolis is a hill about 500 feet high with about 1000 by 500 feet of level space on top. This was the nucleus of the city, which was the center of culture in ancient times. The city is about 3500 years old, stories of its origin being mixed up with mythology.

Athens, the capital of Greece, has made much progress the last 130 years, since the royal residence was placed here. We saw the colorfully dressed guards, never moving a muscle, at the King's home; King Constantine, of course, was else where. The opinion here seemed to be that there would have been no trouble if the King had realized the conditions of today and had reduced his extravagant or kingly way of living.

The government square, supreme court building, university, the street cafes, the huge Olympic stadium, where in 1906 the Olympic games were revived—the runner with the light from Mount Olympus had just left with the light for the Olympic games in France—all this

Building Plans

The actual papers have not been signed but the Bank of Marlinton plans to exercise options to buy the Alpine Hotel lots, the store building, owned by Clark Galford which housed Ralston's Men Shop, and two vacant lots owned by Omar Trent, directly North of the hotel lots. A new bank building will be built and the present bank building will be sold. The officers and directors are busy looking at buildings in other towns and consulting architects. They have considered a new building at various times but they feel, in view of the calamities, that now is an opportune time to make a move forward for Marlinton and Pocahontas County.

Mrs. Edna Webb plans to acquire the El Poca Motel at the time these other transactions are finalized.

'Round the World

Left New Delhi very early in the morning by Pan American for Beirut, Lebanon. The sun caught up with us—or we caught up with the sun—about half way to Teheran, touching the fluffy mist with a delicate pink.

Light snow etched the mountains of Pakistan, soon becoming a heavy blanket in Afghanistan and Iran. The terrain changed from mountains to desolate desert to snowy mountains again.

Landing at Teheran, we became conscious of war tensions again as the fighter planes were landing and taking off. After taking a picture of the airport against the snowy mountains, including the 18,000-foot peak Mt. Damavand, with a cloud halo, the pilot said the Iranians didn't like to have pictures taken of planes, etc., and would sometimes confiscate film.

The name meaning book. Here is a Crusader's fort and nearby ruins of the Roman and Phoenician cultures.

One of THE places in Beirut to visit is the free port section, where Persian rugs may be bought free of duty. Guides get a percentage of things so they see that you visit such places. There were thousands of rugs and the give you the royal treatment, make you comfortable, serve coffee and orange juice, and at a clap of a hand have men unfold rugs in the size or color you might desire. I just acted like a rich buyer, not quite able to decide whether to get the $1100 or $1300 rug. When I said I'd decide by the next day, the young man called another man, then his uncle, to make a special price, and I was relieved to finally get out of there. The rugs were beautiful, soft and silky. Some take years to make as the rugmakers work only two hours at a time because of the strain of the close work.

Unable to go the mountains to visit Baalbek, one of the oldest towns in the world, because of the snow, the next tour was to the south, taking in an old castle or palace now restored and used by the President in summer. Here were terraced hills with many olive trees. Then to Tyre and Sidon, again visiting a Crusader's fort and extensive excavations Damavand, with a cloud halo, the pilot said the Iranians didn't like to have pictures taken of planes, etc., and would sometimes confiscate film.

The plane didn't take a direct line to Lebanon, since Americans are not allowed to go into Syria, so the flight went out into the Mediterranean—which is as blue as they say—and down off the coast to land at Beirut.

The one disappointment of the trip was that I didn't get to Israel, but the airline travel agent had advised against it, particularly with my limited time. Unexpected events and delays usually arise. So instead I visited Lebanon, the land famous for the cedars sent by King Hiram to King Solomon for the temple in Jerusalem.

This section of the world had just had a terrible storm—for four days the waves had battered the sea walls, roads and seaside restaurants in Lebanon, the highest waves anyone could remember. This storm had laid the heavy snow on the mountains. But today the sun is brilliant and this is a picturesque place—the blue Delegate Tom Edgar called from Charleston Tuesday, concerned about the report that many people in Pocahontas were saying that he is opposed to the new school program. He wants the people to know that he has made no such statement—he has been too busy in Charleston since the first of January to even keep properly informed about developments, although he did offer his help if needed. He certainly realizes our problems and needs in schools and, like everybody else, is waiting to hear more of the Board of Education's plans.

A four-hour trip by British Overseas Airlines Company took me from the heat of Bangkok to the cool of Northern India in darkness. Several times lightning flared up through the clouds Coming from the Palam Air port at New Delhi at 10:30 at night was right eerie. Here were all these ghoulish figures with blankets draped over their heads and wrapped around them. It was cold and this was the Indian taxi driver's overcoat.

New Delhi is India's capital and its government center has wide streets and excellent buildings; its congress meets in the largest circular building in the world. Contrasted to it is Old Delhi, where streets are narrow and people and animals and shops are crowded together.

A three hour trip on a good railroad takes you to Agra, 120 miles to the south. Leaving at 7 it was not fully light. People were sleeping on all platforms and sheltered places. Along the fields and railroad were small huts and shelters and also many people out in the open in the familiar squatting position with their clothing wrapped closely around them.

Much of the land looked worn out but then there were some nice wheat fields.

The government of India is promoting tourism and has very low cost tours.

For $2.34 we had a bus tour, with a guide, that lasted from 10 until 7, with soft drinks, a good lunch, and tea and potato chips in the evening. First we visited Fatehpur Sikri, 26 miles away. This was the first fortress city of the Mogul kings in the fifteenth century. Then back to Agra Fort.

miles away. This was the first fortress city of the Mogul kings in the fifteenth century. Then back to Agra Fort.

There are several old forts and palaces and mosques but the jewel of Agra is the Taj Mahal, one of the man-made wonders of the world. It took 20,000 men 10 years to build this graceful monument of marble and inlaid stones over the tomb of the king's most loved wife.

The next day 80 cents paid for a guided bus trip, morning and afternoon, to New and Old Delhi. Here again were the elaborate forts, palaces, mosques. The Quth Minar tower, 266 feet high, is a remarkable structure and nearby is an iron column 1600 years old with no rust. Only groups of three were allowed to climb the tower because of suicide troubles.

The most recent walled palace, the Red Fort in Old Delhi, was built by the same king who had the Taj Mahal built, and it shows many similarities. Here was the home of the rust. Only groups of three were allowed to climb the tower because of suicide troubles.

The most recent walled palace, the Red Fort in Old Delhi, was built by the same king who had the Taj Mahal built, and it shows many similarities. Here was the home of the famous jeweled peacock throne, now in Iran.

The splendor and magnificence of these buildings a few centuries ago, with carpets and hangings etc., can hardly be imagined; one wonders, however, what would be the results today if the efforts and money had been spent for education and things for the public good.

Children were everywhere and, when asked if education were cumpulsory, the guide said there was no use requiring them to go to school as they couldn't possibly get enough schools for all of them—they were using tents now. There are about a half billion

At the mosques you take off your shoes or put covers over them, so it's on and off all day. Also the forts have many high steps, so by the second day your muscles tell the tale.

Also visited were the cremation spots of Mahatma Ghandi and Nehru; off came the shoes.

Along the street was a man with a flute "charming" a hooded cobra.

India is also famous for its silk, most of which is lighter weight than the Thailand silk. Many of the Indian women were wearing their beautiful saris, about six yards of silk or cotton wrapped and draped around them.

Silks, brass, ivory, jewelry, inlaid work were the main things on sale.

An hour of of Indian classical dancing finished the evening Tuesday. These dances were fast and lively as compared to the slow movement of the Thais.

Homemaker of Tomorrow

Because she finished first in a written knowledge and attitude examination for senior girls December 5, 1967, Ramona Chappell has been named 1968 Betty Crocker Homemaker of Tomorrow for Hillsboro High School.

Ramona's achievement has made her eligible for state and national scholarship awards and also has earned her a specially designed silver charm from General Mills, sponsor of the Betty Crocker Search for the American Homemaker of Tomorrow program.

A state Homemaker of Tomorrow and runner-up will be selected from the winners of the schools in the state. The state winner will receive a $1,500 college scholarship, and her school will be awarded a complete set of the Encyclopaedia Britannica by Encyclopedia Britannica Inc. The runner-up will earn a $500 educational grant.

'Round the World

Wednesday, January 10, we board a Thai Airline's plane for Hongkong. Basil, Marie and Heidi go along for a visit to this international shopping mecca. The long list of items requested by others grew to be a joke.

We travel almost half way down the island of Taiwan before getting over the ocean. The high mountain range, 13,000 feet and above, shows above the mists banked against them; many peaks have snow.

The captain says the temperature in Hongkong will be 63, a little cooler than we left. This 530 mile trip will last only about 90 minutes, yet we have a meal—lobsters. Also the beautiful Thai stewardess gives us orchids and fans. Now mainland China appears on the right; no distinguishing marks. Soon many small boats appear below, the motorized junks, and we soon circle around Victoria Island and land at the airport in Kowloon section.

Kowloon (nine dragons) is a peninsula, across the harbor from which is Victoria Island; these and the outlying territories, areas of land behind Kowloon, make up Hongkong, a British Crown Colony. Hongkong means "fragrant harbor."

Hongkong has many high buildings, about 15 stories high. this is unusual in the East bu here the foundations are in solid rock. There are probably a dozen housing developments, each consisting of several units of these high apartment buildings, for low income people. Still the refugees from Red China pour into Hongkong and many live in huts on the mountain side in one section. There are now almost four million people here; ninety-nine percent are Chinese.

and many live in huts on the mountain side in one section. There are now almost four million people here; ninety-nine percent are Chinese.

One U. S dollar is worth six Hongkong dollars, only 29 cents change since devaluation.

There are a few department type stores, on several floors, but most are the open front gift-type stores, many featuring a single line of items. In most of them you still haggle on the price—it is expected. Ladder Street has only steps; Kat Street or Thieves Market is where many stolen items are supposedly sold. We went into one big Communist Chinese store; things are very cheap here but cannot be taken into the United States; they have huge pictures of Mao and tables of red literature for sale.

Sticking out from all the apartment houses are bamboo poles with clothes drying. Off the United States; they have huge pictures of Mao and tables of red literature for sale.

Sticking out from all the apartment houses are bamboo poles with clothes drying. Off the main streets are the familiar Chinese cooked food stands and tables, and street markets.

The lights at night are beautiful; lights on the boats in the harbor and the city lights rising on each side.

Hongkong is the place to get clothes made—they have famous makes of cloth from all over the world, and good tailors. They also make shoes and are famous for beaded sweaters, carved ivory and jade, furniture, porcelains and paintings.

We took the boat tour of the harbor, which takes two hours. We went through one of the floating villages, where 146,000 people live on boats. There

In the harbor were boats of all nationalities, a Navy hospital ship (the Seventh Fleet comes here for recreation), junks with colorful sails, children in small boats diving for money.

The next day we took the island bus tour, starting off with the tram or cable car ride up to Victoria Peak. It goes up at a forty-five degree angle, which is mighty steep; an excellent view going up and from the top. The business section is at the bottom; homes of the wealthy are on the sides and top. We then go through the Susie Wong section, Tiger Balm Gardens, a hillside park with animal forms, etc.; beautiful Repulse and Deepwater Bays on the back side. We stop at Aberdeen Fishing Village for a seafood lunch on the Floating Restaurant, going in and out by

Now it is time to take Thai Airlines flight 1170 miles to Bangkok in Thailand.

Over half of this trip is over the South China Sea. We pass quickly over Vietnam below the 17th parallel, seeing nothing but forested hills, then over Laos, across the Mekong into Thailand. All you can see is farmland with many canals. The rice paddies here are big, with vast areas in rice.

They claim it is the best rice in the world.

Bangkok is a hustling, growing, building city, the capital of Thailand, having 2,000,000 of its 30,000,000 inhabitants.

In 1939 the name of the country was changed from Siam to Thailand, which means "home of the free." It has never been owned by another country. Forty-six per cent of its people live on farms and 92 per cent outside of cities and their main means of transportation is by small boats on canals, which run everywhere.

A seven o'clock boat tour to the floating markets was good. Down the big river, seeing temples (Thailand has 20,000) and other sites and up a canal we came to the stores where the farmers' wives bring the boat loads of vegetables and fruits to sell and trade. Water taxis zoom by—long slim boats with tremendous engines. There is a traffic jam with the policeman walking across the tops of boats.

This is a tropical country, with an abundance of all kinds of fruit and vegetables, plus alligators, crocodiles, snakes of all kinds, elephants—a highlight of the trip was my first elephant ride—and monkeys. Buddhism is the national religion and a temple tour takes you to see the Emerald Buddha, a jade figure several feet high whose cloak is changed each season by the King, the Gold Buddha, a solid hunk of gold, and the reclining Buddha, a massive 160 foot figure on its side. Many of the temples show lack of care now that money is being spent on public schools instead of the children being taught by the priests.

Stone statues abound at gateways, etc. These were brought by Chinese ships as ballast when they came for tea. Also many temples are decorated with China plates and cups

Deaths

Emerson Clark Wooddell, of Marlinton, age 76 years, died April 21, 1968 in the Letter

The following letter was received at the Anthony Job Corps Center:

April 1, 1968

Dear Mr. Stout,

My son has returned home after spending a year at Anthony and I want to thank you and your staff for your help and kindness. I feel that he has learned a lot and stands a better chance in facing the future with the help that he received there.

It was a bitter day for all of us when we were told by the school principal that he was unable to learn. You have proved this untrue and I shall be forever grateful. If the public schools had more people that would take a little more time and try to understand the children, I'm sure there wouldn't be so many mixed up and unhappy ones. It really isn't easy for a child to be marked as retarded when he really hasn't had a chance to prove different. If there we e more understanding people like the ones at Anthony, I'm sure there would be less drop-outs.

So I want to thank you all for this past year that you have worked with my son. I appreciate everything that you have done and I am very grate ful that I sent him to you. I wish you good luck in your work and I hope all of the boys that you have there will realize and appreciate what you are trying to do for them.

Again may I say thanks to you all.

Sincerely,

Thanking you, I remain

Sincerely,

D. R. Hannah

Opinion

As a lifelong citizen of Pocahontas County, I take this opportunity to express my desire for the passage of the proposed School Bond issue to be voted upon May 14. I think that the passage of this school bond is paramount to the future welfare of the people of our County, schools, churches, banks, farmers, business places, our hospital and the securing of and maintaining doctors to care for the health of our people.

I am aware that no one plan or proposition will or can contain all the features desirable to our people. However, I am convinced that one centralized high school in the County will benefit and meet the needs of the majority of our people. Furthermore, one centralized high school in the county can offer a wider curriculum which will enable the children of our county to enter better colleges and universities.

Since I have no children to attend school, I have no selfish motive in the passage of this issue. However I am very much interested in better schools for the children as well as the well

Since I have no children to attend school, I have no selfish motive in the passage of this issue. However I am very much interested in better schools for the children as well as the well being of the senior citizens.

I believe that we can better the condition of our County and its citizens by the passage of this bond issue. It is my belief that more people would be interested in locating in our county instead of the present tendency to leave the county. Some matters of importance at this time are being held in abeyance awaiting the results of the forthcoming election relative to the passage of the bond issue.

May we all look forward toward better schools and a more progressive county in which to live.

I am convinced that we can better our present situation by voting for this bond issue on May 14th.

Dear Friend of HECTOR,

It has been two months since I last wrote to you. During that time much has happened.

After a quiet cruise from Long Beach, we tied up in Pearl Harbor not far from the USS ARIZONA Memorial. This was not a stop for work purposes, but one for meetings with the staff of the Commander-in-Chief, U. S. Pacific Fleet, and the staff of the Commander, US. Service Forces, Pacific. It is under the latter command that HECTOR falls. When the meetings were finished, we sailed again—this time for the Orient.

While crossing the Pacific, a storm hit us that lasted for several days. However, it posed no real problem for HECTOR'S efficient crew.

While a storm hit us that lasted for several days. However, it posed no real problem for HECTOR'S efficient crew.

On the twenty fourth of January, as we sailed into the harbor of Yokosuka, Japan, Mt. Fuji loomed majestically in the distance. It is hard to believe that just a few years ago this lovely country was at war with us. Today, Japan is one of our greatest allies in the Western Pacific.

Our orders called for us to stay until the middle of February, but the "Pueblo Incident" caused a quick modification of these orders. After only three days in Japan, we were sent South to further strengthen the Seventh Fleet's preparedness during the crisis.

We are now anchored in the harbor of Kaohsiung, Taiwan, fulfilling our mission of keeping other ships seaworthy. As of this date, we have worked on over 30 ships ranging in size fr)m on the galley of one destroyer

As an illustration of HEC-

though it meant more work

HECTOR has the reputation of never turning down a reasonable request for work. Firmly believing in the adage, "The difficult you do immediately, the impossible takes a little longer." Such was the case when we undertook the building of a ladder (i. e., a stairway) for one of the ships along side. Although a shipyard and five other repair facilities had refused the same request, the Shipfitters accepted and finished the job in less than a week. Examples of this type of willingness are endless as the commands that we have worked on will attest to.

Because our stay here has lasted longer than the stay in Japan, the crew has had a chance to take advantage of liberty call and see some of modern Free China. Several tours have been arranged by

In addition to visiting the people and cities of Taiwan, we have been able to take advantage of the relatively low prices, and buy gifts for you that would prove too costly if purchased back home.

Since we have been deployed, there have been several requests for emergency leave that unfortunately had to be turned down. Several conditions must first be complied with in order for a request of this nature to be approved. Why Vote to Pay More Taxes?

That is what a vote in favor of the school bond would mean to anybody in the County who owns real estate—at least that is one thing it would mean. I have some real estate, and I surely do not like to pay taxes! I have no relative in (or out) of school in Pocahontas County as my two daughters have long since finished with county schools and moved on. Why, then, should I vote for the school bond?

I'm real glad you asked, friend.

We miss no opportunity to boast of our adopted county to outsiders; her matchless mountain beauty; her parks, forests, and streams. We are proud of the resourcefulness of her people as reflected in the County Museum; the Cass Scenic Railroad; and the golf course—all created by the efforts of many people to improve the place we live. We claim the best highway snow removal crews in the state; and, in view of our recent successes, immodestly steer conversations to the subject of high school athletics, when possible.

many people to improve the place we live. We claim the best highway snow removal crews in the state; and, in view of our recent successes, immodestly steer conversations to the subject of high school athletics, when possible.

One thing we are unable to boast of, though, is the Pocahontas County Schools—especially the buildings or the educational "plant" as school people say. We want to see that improved. We do not want to be third rate in anything, and certainly not in anything so vital as the school system. So we are for the bond issue and urge our friends to work for it, too. We want to see the children of Pocahontas have every possible opportunity to learn and compete favorably with children from other counties. We want the teachers of our schools to have what they need to do the most effective teaching. Certainly we know it will mean a bit more taxes, but it is something we must have, for nothing. We regret, too. that one central high school will make it necessary for children to ride busses farther than they now ride Perhaps it is unfortunate that our sparsely settled county covers such an elongated geographical area. We are well aware of the sectionalism that sometimes has led to inaction in this county because proposed improvements appeared to favor one section over another, but we trust there are enough fair minded, progressive, thinking people to pass the bond issue and give the whole county what it so urgently and obviously needs.

In addition to the much broader curriculum outlined recently, it seems plain that one central high school could have a larger and better library, better equipped laboratories, shops and other classrooms at a cost below that which we now pay for sub-standard facilities in three different schools. And would not all of us like to see what could be accomplish-now pay for sub-standard facilities in three different schools. And would not all of us like to see what could be accomplished by combining the musical and athletic talent from the three present schools into one varsity band and one varsity team? It would obviously cost less than training and equip ping three bands and three teams.

We are convinced that Pocahontas County has an impartial and dedicated school administration staff interested in responding, not to the wishes or whims of Green Bank, Marlinton, or Hillsboro, but to the needs of Pocahontas County.

For OUR sake let us get behind them and give them the support they deserve and must have. There surely is not much to be said for the alternative course.

'Round the World

One day hardly scratches the surface of a place but a good guided tour can cover a lot of territory and if you don't have a week or so you crowd the day.

In Rome, a morning tour covered the ancient places of interest, walls and gates, excavated sections, the Capitol, the Forums, the Pantheon, Circus Maximus, where the chariot races were run, art gallerys and museum, the church with St. Peter's chains and Michelangelo's statue of Moses, considered one of his best, and the Colosseum, one of the most interesting visits. This stadium to hold 60,000 is 1900 years old, about half of it gone. The bricks were used for other buildings—they hadn't fallen down. There are thirty entrance ways and I noticed the Roman numerals IIII and VIIII etc. were used rather than IV and IX. Here the gladiators fought and the condemned and wild

Here the gladiators fought and the condemned and wild animals. In the afternoon I went to the Vatican, a state unto itself. First I went to the Vatican Museum, an overwhelming collection of all types of sculpture, paintings, tapestries, and church relics of all kinds. Very few are marked in English; a guide book helps. You walk miles here. In the Sistine Chapel they were retouching or just cleaning the famous paintings on the walls and ceiling. There was a marked difference.

A carriage ride took me to St. Peter's Cathedral, the largest church structure in the world—very ornate and beautiful, rich with art treasures, unbelievably big, with special chapels off each side; famous statues everywhere; the Treasury is to the left con-

This carriage was the last of my special modes of transportation—pedicab, ricksha, sampan, elephant ride. I saw two camels in Lebanon but didn't get to ride.

You feel falsely rich again here with lots of lira. A thousand lira equals $1.50.

My hotel—Hotel Hassler—was close by the Spanish Steps, broad steps leading to an old church. The steps are a market place for beautiful fresh flowers and seemed to be a meeting place for students who looked a little on the beat'nik side. Nearby were good shops. The shops close ten or fifteen minutes when it is time for a coffee break.

The style of clothes is good here and the women are well dressed. There are a lot of high close-fitting leather boots. No miniskirts. The only miniskirts I have seen on my trip have been from London.

Major William M. Pandak, Director of Athletics and Head Basketball Coach at Staunton Military Academy, Staunton, Virginia, recently presented a varsity basketball monogram to Michael Kane, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Kane, of Cass. He was a member of the Virginias' Military League Championship Basketball Team which compiled a season record of twenty wins as against only two losses. Staunton averaged 95 points a game and scored over 100 points in nine contests. This concludes a third consecutive unbeaten season for Coach Pandak's SMA teams and four in the last five years.

SMA competes against college freshman teams and others comprised of students in the post graduate school.

Mike received a championship league medal and team championship certificate from the Superintendent of the Academy.

Schools

A lot of people believe that enough money could be raised to build the new school by putting a $10.00 tax on car registrations in Pocahontas County. This is not a possibility because it would not be a legal source for school revenue.

I realize a lot of new methods should be instituted involving the tax structure and the tax method in our State; however, this is strictly a job of the State Legislature and the Board of Education must operate under the present law structure. We are presenting the only method that we legally have to finance the new school.

Vocational Education Funds—The Pocahontas County Board

vocational facilities in the new high school. The only way to secure this money is through the Bond issue on May 14. The Board of Education is assured of 50 per cent of the cost on the vocational facilities when the Bond Issue passes. If the Bond Issue should fail, the money allocated to Pocahontas County would go to the next county on the priority list.

At this time we do not know the amount in dollars we will receive from the State and Federal Governments; however, we are assured of "money" if the Bond Issue passes. WE CANNOT AFFORD TO FAIL IN MAY.

If you have any questions concerning the Bond Issue please call or write to the Board of Education Office. We welcome your comments and suggestions.

Sincerely,
Grey M. Cassell

Opinion

Dear Jane:

I have read an opinion on the school bond issue which (to quote the lady's own words) made my blood boil.

This is not the days of one room schools and nine or ten students to a class room, but the days of the greatest opportunity to be had by young people for many years. Yes, it is a fast moving age but to be able to live and support a family in this computer age (as she so aptly stated), one must have the knowledge only a consolidated school would be able to provide for the children in Pocahontas County.

When I think of the larger scale of courses to be taught if the school is built, I see many young people able to cope with the years ahead in this constantly moving world. I only wish I could have had the opportunity to attend this type of school.

M. H. S. was and still is a fine school but the opportunity of taking various courses does not exist because of space, teachers for the courses, and most of all money to support these classes.

I agree that transportation to this school would be an inconvenience to many young people; however, is not inconvenience a small price to pay for the excellent education to be obtained in such a fine school.

In Greater Cincinnati (population over one million) the classes are still larger than the classes of all three schools if consolidated. Yet, the teachers do know their students, names—they do take an interest in the students, difficulties. The students are not just a computer number.

My two children are not yet of school age, but I know if I were a resident of Pocahontas County I would be at the polls bright and early on the morning of May 14th and make the biggest X possible in the YES block for that Schoo' Bond Issue.

Dear Mrs. Sharp:

A few weeks ago I read a letter in your paper from a former citizen of Pocahontas County who now lives in Iowa, and I would like to give you my ideas of the so-called one room schools. I attended a one room school a number of years ago, had to walk nine miles and across a mountain. Many times in the winters my brother and I would have to walk with our back to the wind in order to breathe. There were blizzards several months of each year and tempera u es

I have no regrets that the one room schools have been replaced by the more modern type of school. "Man's Eternal Quest for Knowledge" (quote) means the child of today needs and must have more knowledge than we did. This is a new, modern world. Children need vocational training, languages, and many courses in order to get into our Universities which the present high schools cannot give them. All Citizens of Pocahontas County owe our youngsters this needed training and a Central High School would meet this need. They must have it in order to grow into the kind of people

Marlinton is the heart of Pocahontas; the people have been hit hard this year and this is our opportunity to keep the good business people with us. If we cannot give them the schools they need they will go elsewhere, and can we afford to let them?

Both Hillsboro and Green Bank have much to gain in this project, and it will not be long until they will have to expand their programs. The teachers will not lose their jobs In fact, the Board of Education will be needing more teachers to meet the needs of extra classes.

So, let's get behind our Board of Education and pass the bond issue. We have much to gain and we all need to keep our County progressing along with other counties.

Just a little more on the sawmills along the Greenbrier River and Pocahontas County.

There were two sizeable sawmills which I didn't see mentioned in listing. One was at Harter, on the Greenbrier River, and one at what used to be Big Run, on the Greenbrier. Both mills between Marlinton and Clover Lick.

My stepfather worked on the one at Big Run, which burned about 1911. These mills were in operation around 1909-1910. I do not recall the name of the Companies, but perhaps some of the old timers would know them.

Opinion

Slatyfork, W. Va.

Editor of Pocahontas Times:

I sincerely hope the voters of Pocahontas County will support the proposed School Bond issue.

I don't think it is necessary for me to defend public education because that is a moral responsibility of my elders, and I hope it will be evident by a positive attitude and positive action of our citizens this spring.

My age group will be adults of tomorrow, confronted with frightening problems of a complex world. The educated will be more apt in finding solutions.

Don't let the youth of Pocahontas County be found lacking!

Sincerely.

every day. Why should I have to pay extra money to pay for a county wide high school? My children are gone and left the county and are now on their own. Why worry? That is a very selfish attitude for us to feel that way.

Recently I talked with a School Board member of Greenbrier County where they have voted six times to raise money to build two high schools in that county. It finally passed, but if it had passed the first time they could have saved themselves one million dollars extra cost, due to inflation.

We also have inflation in Pocahontas, so we should get behind this issue and vote yes, now.

Better schools will mean more and better doctors, also better teachers. We will never get industry to come into the county, where the children have such little chance for the best in education.

People are anxious to build new homes in our county, but the schools are the drawback. They say if the bond issue doesn't carry, we will move to a place that has good schools, and all these people are good substantial citizens of our County whom we can hardly afford to lose.

Someone paid for the schools we attended, and which gave us our start; now it is our duty to assist the present and future school children to have a better chance.

Dear Miss Harper:

Please accept my warmest congratulations on your accomplishments in attaining a straight "A" average for the first semester of the current school year. The pursuit of excellence is the primary objective of any educational institution, and your achievement is a substantial contribution to West Virginia University's progress toward that goal.

My husband and I own land and pay taxes in Pocahontas County. Our only son has graduated from high school. We would have many reasons that others have to oppose the bond issue for the new high school.

However, this letter expresses my personal feeling, as a teacher, and as a citizen of Pocahontas County.

I am now in my tenth year of teaching, seven years of which have been in Pocahontas County. I realize this is a short time in comparison to the length of service of some of my colleagues, but it has been a long enough time for me to come to know very well some of the children of the county, and to follow their careers as they have gone on through high school to become young adults. I am sure there are no finer children anywhere, none with more potential for achievement and, by and large, none with better character.

As a teacher, I find that I feel less anxiety for the futures of the "bright" children, the so-called "advantaged" children, than for some others who pass through my classroom. The bright youngsters will succeed in spite of, if not because of, educational obstacles. Most of them will go on to college; our county schools already do a creditable job of preparing students for college, as attested by the number who do complete college successfully.

But I am concerned for the boy who does only average academic work, but suddenly comes to life in science class when we study power machines; who brings a small gasoline motor to class and takes it apart, piece by piece, explaining its workings in language the class can understand.

I am concerned for the little girl for whom arithmetic is a bore and a chore, but who fills her notebook with lovely drawings, and has a good sense of color and design.

What will happen to them in high school? The boy with extra training, could be a first class automobile mechanic, or an electronics technician. The girl could be a commercial artist or a designer. Will the boy become a drop-out because his high school cannot offer the courses he needs? If he finishes high school, will he be unable to find a job because others, from other schools, are better trained? Will the girl have the training necessary to develop her talent?

During his tour of duty in Vietnam, Richard was wounded three times. The first wound that he received was in the left shoulder on July 6, 1967, while on Operation Buffalo. He was again wounded on October 12, 1967, while on Operation Medina. This time the wounds were in the right shoulder and the head. The last wound was in the right leg, received while on Operation Granite, on October 31st. He received a Purple Heart for each wound, plus various ribbons, and also earned the right to be transferred out of the fighting zone. Richard reached Okinawa, on December 21st 1967.

Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Beverage, of Marlinton, have received the following letter from James W. Tangney, Major, USAF.

I'm sure you know that your son, Pvt. Eugene R. Beverage, is enrolled in the Air Traffic Control Course here at Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi, Mississippi. It gives me pleasure to inform you that he has distinguished himself by attaining an average grade of 90 per cent through two consecutive blocks of instruction. His performance has provided an example and a challenge for his fellow students.

His ability to quickly and thoroughly grasp the material presented is indicative of outstanding potential. The Army is indeed fortunate to have members of his caliber.

Be assured that I share your pride. I extend my personal congratulations.

The Pocahontas Times
Marlinton, W. Va.

I have read with much interest, in the January 25 issue of the Times, the column headed "Lumber Companies." Major operations in Pocahontas from 1900 to the 1930's.

Having worked for several of these operations in what we call upper Pocahontas, Deer Creek, Boyer, Hoovertown and Thornwood, 1912 through September 1918, I feel that I can give you a little information that may be of some help.

Boyer and later Nottingham was operated by M. P. Bock first, then H. J. Wilmoth & Sons I have no recollection of Virginia Lumber Company ever operating at Boyer, but do know that I was manager of the Boyer Company Store during 1913 and the company name then was Clark and McCullough, who also was interested in the operation at Olive on the C&I .

Dunlevie, later Thornwood, was operated by E. V. Dunlevie, who bought the timber which laid mostly in Highland County, on the Laurel Fork, Middle Mountain and straight fork section of Highland. Dunlevie operated from 1903 to 1906, then Flint Ervin and Stoner 1906 to 1911. Under the same management, Thornwood Lumber Company 1911 to 1913. Kendall Lumber Company finished the job 1913 through 1915.

One operation that you do not have listed was not a major one but worthy of mention. This was Ed Hoover, who was among the first and operated a body of timber just across the Greenbrier River, opposite the Pocahontas Tanning Company. This operation was under his name until finished in 1907 then was operated from 1907 through 1909 under the name Hoover and Yeager (Wil-

This was not a lumber operation. From 1915 to 1918 there

This was not a lumber operation. From 1915 to 1918, there was an operation between Cass and Deer Creek known as the Extract Plant. This plant manufactured what was known as Osage Orange Extract made from what was known as Osage Orange wood and shipped from the state of Oklahoma and was used for coloring cloth for soldiers uniforms during World War I.

'Round the World

A two-hour flight with Air France took me from Rome to Paris. Darkness hid the Alps, which was a disappointment.

After checking through immigration and customs—no place on my trip was I bothered with much more than a statement as to whether or not I had any firearms—I realized how hard people are to please. All through the East there were throngs of porters rushing to move your bag—and be paid—each few feet and people sort of resented it. Here not a porter moved to offer help and it was a little irritating.

My hotel, George V, was conveniently located but it was too late to do any sightseeing. However, when I looked out my window there was the Eiffel Tower beautifully lighted, framed with the moon and a church tower.

too late to do any sightseeing. However, when I looked out my window there was the Eiffel Tower beautifully lighted, framed with the moon and a church tower.

An early morning walk took me past churches, sidewalk cafes not yet open with the chairs on the tables, shops, travel agencies. The streets were being scrubbed and swept, washed down—with water flowing from pipes beneath the sidewalk corners. Paris has had a clean-up campaign the past year or so.

Tourists were scarce so several tours were combined for this morning. Another good guide; most of them are good but sometimes the accent is hard to understand. This one could guide in English, Spanish, Italian, German and Russian, and her English was exceptionally good.

There are over a hundred Catholic churches and 45 Protestant churches in Paris; outside of Paris there is only one Protestant church—at Nice.

We drove the famous streets, saw the Arc d' Triumph, statues, the place where the guillotines were set up in the Revolution, War College and Napoleon's tomb, cathedrals, churches, temples, the famous banking and investment houses, jewelry stores, Maxim's, the famous restaurant, etc. There was no water in the beautiful fountains here either, it being

The women were smartly dressed but not so much as in Rome, it seemed to me.

After the tour I walked several blocks to the Eiffel Tower, going through the park where children were playing and riding ponies and burros. This tower was built in two years by Henry Eiffel in 1886 on a challenge and the principle is

The airport terminal at Paris was the longest of any I was in and it seemed a half mile to Gate 40. You have to pay $5 departure tax at Paris, $1.20 at Rome.

The trip across the Atlantic took seven hours and the clock moved ahead six hours, so the sun was setting most of the way across. Gradually we fell behind and it was dark as we came to the coast of Maine, down past Boston, to New York's busy Kennedy Airport. There was just a minute's delay in getting permission to land. Before we got off the plane, three more planes had landed.

It was good to think this was the last time my passport and health certificates had to be checked. After explaining the miscellaneous on my list, $4.38 duty was the bill. Back on the plane (smelling like it had been fumigated), a short stop at Friendship Airport (this completed my world circle), and then off at Dulles Airport. I walked off the plane into the two-story lounge car and was transported in style to the terminal. There the first news I heard was that the hotel had burned—I hadn't had any news from Marlinton since I left.

We are sure that nearly all of you have heard rumors of one sort or another in the past few months in regard to the proposed Central High School and Bond Issue. During the next few weeks we shall endeavor to refute the rumors and present the facts.

RUMOR NUMBER ONE

The School Board will change the location of the school after the Bond Issue is passed.

ANSWER:

In the Bond call it states where the proposed high school will be located.

The school will be located adjacent to the Seneca State Forest on a 75 acre plot owned by H. L. Comer, of Pence Springs. The Board will purchase this property with funds from the Bond Issue. This site was picked for a number of chase this property with funds from the Bond Issue. This site was picked for a number of reasons:

A. It is large enough for future expansion if Pocahontas County grows.

B. It is convenient for the majority of the students of Pocahontas County and is centrally located for the total population of Pocahontas County.

C. The cost of the property was $15,000 which was less than other sites observed.

D. The Brown's Creek Road will more than likely be turned into a major highway through Pocahontas County because of the terrain. More tourists will be coming into our county and roads will steadily improve.

One of the big questions has been the distance and time involved in transporting the students to the new school. The specific distances have been measured to and from all locations several times. The times have been checked with be coming into our county and roads will steadily improve.

One of the big questions has been the distance and time involved in transporting the students to the new school. The specific distances have been measured to and from all locations several times. The times have been checked with a school bus loaded with students from Green Bank to the site, from Marlinton to the site, and from Hillsboro to the site. The times from other locations are estimated on the basis of the information that we obtained from our studies, From Durbin, 24.2 miles, 42 minutes. From Green Bank 11.8 miles, 19 minutes. From Cass, 14 miles, 22 minutes. From Hillsboro, 24 miles, 45 minutes.

At the present time, we have 623 students enrolled in the three high schools, grades 9—12. When we speak of a Censpeaking about one in which the children will lose their identity. Most of the students already know each other and the new school will give them an opportunity to know one another better, plus having the advantage of a broader and better curriculum.

Of the 623 students, here is an approximate breakdown by areas.

Approximately 104 students will be riding the bus from the Hillsboro area.

Approximately 171 students will be riding the bus from the surrounding area of Marlinton. About 60 of these students are from the Frost and Huntersville area and many of the 60 will be closer to the school than they are now. Approximately 148 students attending Marlinton High School do not ride a bus to school. These students will be riding the buses 14 miles to school.

These 148 students consti-

High School.

The 200 students (9-12) attending Green Bank High School are all transported and about 90 percent are transported to Green Bank High School from surrrounding areas such as Cass, Durbin, Stony Bottom and Wesley Chapel. About 90 per cent of these students will be riding the buses more than the 11.8 miles from Green Bank to the school site.

Certainly the transportation will be a problem with a new central high school. It is already a problem, and we, in the adminis rative field, realize it will require scheduling and rescheduling to make it work effectively. However, let us not deny the children in Pocahontas County a just education because they might have to ride a bus a few minutes longer than they now do.

Opinion

Dear Editor:

In reading the letter published two weeks ago written by Ruth Grimes Turner, we can truly say that we boiled, as she would put it. We don't see how our opportunities would be reduced in any way by having a consolidated school.

Having three class presidents instead of one is ridiculous, because a more intelligent one out of the three could be chosen. The three small teams could be combined together in one that is more powerful and can play more schools. There aren't any small teams left to play, and the little school wouldn't have a chance. So you see, we could write a book also.

A good school should be an educational plant. That's what they're for. In the story, "Thread That Runs So True," written by Jesse Stuart, his main ambition was to have a centralized school

A good school should be an educational plant. That's what they're for. In the story, "Thread That Runs So True," written by Jesse Stuart, his main ambition was to have a centralized school.

We are speaking strictly for ourselves, but we don't think that an "endless" bus ride would kill anyone. The student that Mrs. Turner calls a computer number will be getting a good education.

We're sure that the modern, centralized school that Mrs. Turner saw materialize was a good one. The size of the school shouldn't be blamed for the teacher's actions.

The kind of thing that people are voting for is a good education and opportunity for the generation to come.

We are sorry to say but with the increase of population it would take a large number of one-room schools to educate Pocahontas County. We're sure that the little semblance of democracy our forefathers fought for won't be missed.

The "unit" system probably includes an explanation of how to set in sleeves. Be thankful

The "unit" system probably includes an explanation of how to set in sleeves. Be thankful that the class is available because the small schools may not be able to get a teacher.

The arithmetic in 1913 was probably as simple as it could be, and not too difficult to memorize. If the times tables are the only thing we learn, we are going to be regarded as 1968 idiots. We shall say times have changed and so has math.

The first day of school is a memory for everyone, whether he has a teacher dressed in white or not. The teacher is there to supply knowledge, not love, which is up to the parents to provide. A teacher could supply so much love that the student would not learn a solitary thing.

If we have good education in high school, we can make it more easily to go through college.

Yes, maybe a few of the students of our county have made a good showing, but very few. They had to work their heads off, also. What about the remainder of the students?

Teachers' salaries have gone up just like everyone else's. Therefore, we get only the teachers that can accept the smaller salaries. They aren't always the best teachers available. If we have a large school, it will attract better educated and qualified teachers. The population of this county might start increasing instead of decreasing. In opposition to Mrs. Turner's letter we shall ask one question. Do you want to deprive the Pocahontas County student of a good education that could lead to a prosperous career?

We think that old-fashioned ideas don't blend in with a modern world. The horse and buggy recalls a gay nostalgia also, but they won't get you where you want to go today.

We are positive that almost every student in the county will agree. Don't our wants and needs mean anything?

Silver Star

Mrs. Cora VanMeter, of Slatyfork, was presented the Army's Silver Star which was awarded posthumously to her son, Staff Sergeant Jacob Van Meter, who died in action in Vietnam, October 7, 1967. The presentation was made by Col. R. W. Healey, Commander of the Eastern Sector Command Corps, at the Pocahontas County Court House, Friday, March 15, 1968. Lieutenant Colonel Ora Underwood read the citation as follows:

For gallantry in action: Sergeant Van Meter distinguished himself by exceptionally valorous action on 7 October 1967, while serving as a squad leader with Company C, 1st Battalion, 5th Calvary, during a search and destroy mission near Bong Son, Republic of Vietnam. intense hostile fire, Sergeant Van Meter, disregarding his own safety, exposed himself to the heavy enemy fire as he directed his men into covered positions. He again exposed himself to the hostile fire to draw the fire away from his men. Observing several wounded comrades lying in an exposed area, Sergeant Van Meter moved through the open area and pulled the wounded soldiers to safety. While moving the men to a safe position, Sergeant Van Meter was wounded, but continued until he had completed his task. At this time, while delivering a high volume of covering fire for the wounded men, Sergeant Van Meter was mortally wounded. His gallant action was in keeping with the highest traditions of the military service, and reflects great credit upon himself, his unit, and the United States Army.

Junior joined Alpha Company on 27 December 1966. From the very first he stood out as a fine man, and an exemplary Marine. He was one of the few men in my command who was liked and respected by every person he came in contact with. His performance of duty was more than just dependable; it was a high example to these Marines he led, and a source of great support to his superiors. each and everyone of us.

On the morning of 19 December 1967, at approximately 5:15 a. m., Junior was acting as platoon guide in a Battalion defensive perimeter in Quang Tri Province, South Viet Nam. We had just come under fire from enemy mortars. In the act of suppressing this enemy fire with our own artillery, which was located some distance to the rear, one round from our own barrages fell short, and landed within our Company's position, right next to Junior. He was struck in the back by shrapnel from this short round. A corpsman was by his side within seconds and everything possible was done for him. Junior was immediately evacuated by helicopter to the Third Battal-

Nam, within minutes of being wounded. However, despite skilled medical assistance rendered there, the wound was too severe, and your husband succumbed to his wound at the hospital.

I'd like you to know, Mrs. Schriner, that the Company had several minutes of prayer while still in the field upon learning of his death and that a memorial service was conducted on 25 December 1967.

Taiwan was named Formosa, meaning "beautiful island," by Portuguese explorers. Taiwan means "terraced bay." It is the home of the Republic of China government. In 1949 Chiang Kai-shek moved here from the mainland.

There are twelve and a half million people on its 13,808 square miles, over half of which are forested. A mountain range runs north and south on the eastern part of the island, the highest peak, Mt. Morrison, being over 13,000 feet. About 210,000 aborigines live in the mountains. Their dialects have some similarities to the mountain tribes in the Philippines and they think they came from Malaysia. A close check is kept on the mountain areas: permits are required, one reason being to prevent communists getting established and causing trouble.

The western section is a plain extending to the ocean, only a hundred miles from mainland China. Practically every available foot of this land is tilled. Land is measured and sold by six foot squares. In the north they get two rice crops a year, in the south they get three crops. The people are industrious and energetic, and they are experts at cultivation and irrigation.

During some seasons water is a problem. There are some reservoirs and more are being built. The river beds are very wide and rocky, with a small river meandering from side to side; neat rock and cement levees line the sides. These run full in typhoon season, August to October, when up to forty inches of rain come at one time.

The rice is planted thickly in seed beds and then transplanted to the rice paddies. It takes several years to get a paddy well lined with silt to hold water well. The size varies but most seem to be about 40 by 100. They are plowed by the water buffalo or small garden tractor, flooded before or after to soften, then worked well in the water. But the real show starts after dark when all kinds of wares are laid out along the streets in the "night market." Stores stay open late and all kinds of food stands line the streets at night.

The streets are full of bicycles, motorcycles, pedicabs taxis, ox carts, and people. There is a constant honking as taxis weave in and out. If you haven't "honked" you are more to blame in case of an accident.

After arriving in Taipei (pronounced Ti-bay) on Christmas Eve, we had mid-afternoon lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Laverty. They are from Texas and he is a retired C. P. Taipei is the capital city of the Republic of China, since Chiang Kai-shek and the Nationalists retreated here from mainland China in 1949. Prior to World War II Japan had occupied the island for about fifty years. This creates language difficulties. The older people can speak and write Japanese, the children are learning to read and write Mandarin, and Taiwanese is the common spoken language. Those who came from the mainland lately speak Mandarin.

Here Basil and Marie are attending their second year of language school, learning to speak Taiwanese. Taxi drivers and storekeepers get real excited when they find they can carry on a conversation with them.

Train service is fast and good, running right on time. The cars are modern and comfortable. They have stewardesses, like airlines. If there isn't a dining car, box lunches are served free. In all cases, a hot rice meal is sold in a covered pan, and fruit is always sold. There is a holder for tea glasses by each seat and it is always kept filled. Heidi is asleep when we arrive so the business of the evening is assembling a dollhouse, etc. A soldier friend has provided angel hair and plastic snow, and the Christmas tree is lovely. Miss Esther Rice, who teaches at Tainan Seminary, is visiting for Christmas, and Miss Evelyn Colvin, who teaches at the Bible School in Hsinchu comes for breakfast. All of the West Coast Mission (about 25, including children) join in a progressive Christmas dinner plate under his car to keep the rocks from disabling it. We have to wait in a small town about two hours while they call from the police station about Nettie's mountain permit and residence check; the permits are renewed quarterly. We tour the main streets and watch them making noodles; the dough is rolled thin on a machine and then cut through thin wires; a girl catches them over a wooden rod, cuts them off at about 4 feet and hangs them up to dry.

We go on up the valley, passing sugar cane, the neatly divided fields, terraced fields, on to banana trees, tea plants on higher elevation. We come to a very scenic valley, with a river going from side to side through an unbelievable expanse of rounded stones of all sizes. This becomes a raging current in the rainy season. We begin climbing, the scenery is lovely, the roads like mountainous West Virginia, with breath-taking drops at some places. Then we go down,

We begin climbing, the scenery is lovely, the roads like mountainous West Virginia, with breath-taking drops at some places. Then we go down, down a single lane dirt road, hoping we meet no one. As we come in the village dozens of pre-school children throng around us and walk with us up the hill to the nice little church, where Miss Junkin will have some meetings with Sunday School teachers and leaders. Ordinarily she would have walked up the valley but she was bringing books in this time. There was a sick woman and her husband to bring out. He threw a sack in the back of the car; when he got out we found it was a chicken but not a sound had come from it.

After we delivered the couple to the doctor, we went to see Sun-Moon Lake, a beautiful mountainous lake. As we approached we noticed little road side parks and flowering shrubs along the road, all part of Madame Kai-shek's beautification program. Overlooking the lake is a western type hotel, a lovely teacher's hostel—where teachers get a very low rate—and a Chinese hotel, where Madame Kai-shek likes to come.

The day turns hazy so the view of the mountain is not startling clear as it is most of the year.

A cross-island highway has been built over the mountains, literally carved from the rocks in many places, with many tunnels, and alternating one-way traffic in some sections. The scenery is breathtaking. On the eastern side the road goes down Taroko Gorge, with much bare marble, a showplace of the island.

In Taichung we find the Assembly building—the Province of Taiwan capital—and the Provincial Villiage, a model town built for the government workers. Nearby is Tunghai University with its striking Henry Luce Memorial Chapel. A few miles in the other direction we visit wood carving shops. In the southern end of the Island is Kaoushuing, the industrial port. To the north about an hour's drive is Hsinchu, where there is a mission Bible school, a glass factory, furniture shops, Green Grass Lake with interesting old and new pagodas, with circular tiers within tiers of shelves with porcelain boxes for cremated ashes.

When we visited Tainan, the fourth largest city, farther south on the Island, we visited Tainan Seminary, a local church, Kosigan's Shrine, Museum. and fortress, (Kosigan was a Robin Hood hero type of pirate who won the Island from the Dutch in the sixteenth century), and several temples. We spent several days sight seeing in Taipei. The National Museum is a must, it contains what is said to be the greatest collection of Chinese paintings, manuscripts, porcelains, jade, bronze, and like items, in the world, representing several thousand years of Chinese culture. The exhibit is changed quarterly and the items are stored in vaults back under a mountain. The Grand Hotel, built like a Chinese Palace is another showplace. Taipei has many modern western type ing several thousand years of Chinese culture. The exhibit is changed quarterly and the items are stored in vaults back under a mountain. The Grand Hotel, built like a Chinese Palace is another showplace. Taipei has many modern western type hotels also, and more are being built. Construction of all types —buildings and roads - is booming.

A few miles out is the Temple of a Thousand Steps. We rode around to the side but still had a good many hundred steps. The richness and the intricacies of these temples is almost unbelievable. Many people come to the various temples to burn incense, bring offerings of food and money, petition the gods, honor their ancestors.

My first Sunday we worshipped at a Taiwanese church in Taipei. Couldn't understand a word but some of the hymns were familiar. The choir members had lovely voices. The Tiawanese language is a tonal language—seven tones, and the same word may mean entirely different things in different tones—so they sing well. We were invited to a dinner in the pastor's home above the Church on Tuesday. David G. Irvine
US51713435
United States Army

For distinguishing himself by meritorious achievement while participating in sustained aerial flight in support of combat ground forces of the Republic of Vietnam during the period June 1967 to December 1967. During this time he actively participated in more than twenty-five aerial missions over hostile territory in support of counterinsurgency operations. During all of these missions he displayed the highest order of air discipline and acted in accordance with the best traditions of the service. By his determination to accomplish his mission in spite of the hazards inherent in repeated aerial flights over hostile ter ritory and by his outstanding degree of professionalism and devotion to duty, he has brought credit upon himself, his organization, and the military service.

David is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Irvine, of Route 1, Marlinton.

1967 Wool Program

Pocahontas wool and lamb producers are reminded that the 1967 marketing year for wool ended December 31, 1967. Producers are urged to make sure that all details for the 1967 sales are completed. This includes passing title to the buyer, delivering the wool to the buyer either physically or through documents transferring control to the buyer, and having available all the information needed to determine the buyer's total purchase price.

Applications for the 1967 marketing year payments under the National Wool Act must be on file with the Pocahontas ASCS Office before January 31, 1968. Your County Committee urges that this be done as soon as possible. Incentive payments under the Wool Program are based on the average national price for marketings during the whole year, and this can be determined more exactly if reports on marketings are complete.

Again may we remind you that the deadline for signing applications is January 31, 1968. Payments for the 1967 marketing year will likely begin in April. There is every possibility that the incentive payment will be higher this year.

IN A SNOW BANK

At Droop Mountain Lies a Passenger Train

For Twenty-Four Hours— Forty Passengers Snow Bound and Starvation Threatened

Taken from the February 16, 1905 issue of The Pocahontas Times.

Droop Mountain has ever been an item of strenuousness in lives of Pocahontas people. It was on its sandy plateau that Confederate and Federal forces fought a fiercely contested battle; at its base for miles is a stretch of water whose rocky bed and and precipitous fall was the dread of the raftsman and driver alike, while the mountain itself for thirty years stood as a barrier between a rich country and the depot making life a burden to the unfortunate wagoner whose wheel was not overstrong or loaded too heavily. The clinging mud of winter and the dragging sand of summer impeded the course of the wagon.

Since the building of the railroad, drifts slides, blockades and washouts have been of more frequent occurrence on this ten miles of tract than any other stretch of four times the distance. Rising to a sheer height of many hundred feet so perpendicular as to give the appearance of overhanging or "Drooping" the sand-like sleet of last Wednesday ran from the mountain side in a continuous stream pouring over cliffs in a series of cascades and down to the base of the mountain with a hissing snake like noise that forbode evil to the traveler and railroad man. These streams of sleet were of such volume as to carry along with them leaves and small sticks and even dislodge gravel.

Where the drifts were not yet deep and the snow unpacked the engine in forcing its way would at times be entirely covered with snow. For miles the train forged its way through the storm, plunging headlong into heavier drifts as they showed themselves with wide open throttle, until at last colliding with an unsurmountable weight of snow, the drive wheels turned in fruitless revolution, and the train stranded.

train forged its way through the storm, plunging headlong into heavier drifts as they showed themselves with wide open throttle, until at last colliding with an unsurmountable weight of snow, the drive wheels turned in fruitless revolution, and the train stranded.

So great had been the momentum the engine could not back out of the drift. Ice was on the track and the snow prevented the application of sand. In a short time the four foot drift was up to the sides of the coach and an hour afterwards above the windows, and the train had a list seaward that was not calculated to inspire confidence. With shovels the train crew directed the tide over the platforms between the coaches where the sleet fed through as in a shoot and formed immense drifts over the river bank.

Immediately in front was stranded a train of thirty five freight cars, with a number of its cars buried entirely in the snow.

Luckily Mr. Pierce, superintendent of the Division, was on the train, and a man was immediately dispatched through the blinding storm to the nearest telephone, a distance of nine miles, to summon the various section men and train crews on the Division. The only available engine was at Cass, a distance of nearly fifty miles, and was ten hours in arriving at the scene of the blockade, short on water and coal.

No provision had been made for supper and food, other than apples, was a minus quantity. Of the forty passengers there were a number of children and fears were entertained for their comfort ere the long night was passed, but they fared well, not realizing what had happened, and seemed to enjoy the experience. The real hardship was experienced by the track men, some of whom worked in drifts and under cars all night and all day without even as much as a cup of coffee.

A more secluded spot could not have been found along the whole line of railroad. It was several miles in either direction to a farm house, and the intervening space lay so deep with sleet that walking was nigh impossible, and worse, if anything, than the gnawing hunger pains that soon assailed everyone, with the supply of tobacco running short.

The truth of the old saw that misery makes brothers of every one was never more clearly illustrated. None were heard to complain unduly and all endeavored to make the time pass as quickly as possible, and expressed sympathy for the lot of those who fared not so well as they.

A more cosmopolitan aggregation could not be well imagined. Nearly a dozen states were represented, including the state matrimony, as one facetiously remarked, and was made to go out and sit upon a snow bank for his smartness. The mascots and prime favorites were Mr. and Mrs. Charles McCoy, of Wanless, a happy couple, who were married the evening before and were on their bridal trip. It is not probable they will soon forget the starting out business of their life nor the serenading given them by the smokers of the car in front, and if well wishes count for anything their way through life will never be blocked by the storms of adversity.

By way of diversion a glee club was organized. Of the number of entertainers R. Y. Johnson, traveling out of Charleston; G. A. Lanier, of Huntington, and E. M. Richardson, of Marlinton, were the bright particular stars. Early in the morning a photograph was taken of the heroes to be used as evidence in an application for a Carnegie medal for each of the passengers.

Early in the morning a photograph was taken of the heroes to be used as evidence in an application for a Carnegie medal for each of the passengers.

As an illustration of the weight of the drifts after the snow had been cleared away so as to allow an extra engine to free the passenger engine the double header could not budge the baggage car, which was only moved by the two engines backing off and colliding with it. After the car was loosed it could be moved a few feet at a time.

When the train was finally extricated the track was so heavy that two engines were taxed to draw it at any rate of speed. Railroaders of forty years experience never saw the like, and is only equaled by the Rocky Mountain roads. Renick was not long in being reached, where supper was served and the treat was on the company. Afterwards Ronceverte was made in good order, but about 36 hours late. Every one was glad to go on, but somehow or other it was like the parting of intimate friends and acquaintance.

Fire

Marlinton was dealt another severe loss when the third major fire since June destroyed the Alpine Hotel Building and adjoining building owned by Clark Galford early Tuesday morning. The fire was discovered by Roy Horton about 2:30 a. m. when he was awakened by smoke on the third floor and already had a good start when discovered.

It is believed at this time the fire started behind Kelley's Restaurant. How the smoke got from this area to the third floor so early in the fire, is not understood at present and is one of the aspects of the fire being investigated by an official from the State Fire Marshal's Office.

Again fire companies from surrounding communities responded and had to come over an official from the State Fire Marshal's Office.

Again fire companies from surrounding communities responded and had to come over icy roads to get here. Our loss would have been much greater if it had not been for help. The following towns sent men and equipment: Hot Springs, Virginia, White Sulphur Springs, Hillsboro, Renick, Lewisburg and the Astronomy Observatory. A total of 70 firemen fought cold weather and the blaze, which was not brought under control until 10:30 a. m. Water is still being played on the ruins as this is written Tuesday night.

The two buildings are a total loss and damage is estimated at least $500 000. Businesses located in these buildings are: Alpine Hotel, Alpine Theater, Kelley's Restaurant, Davis Barber Shop, Quality Discount Shop, Pocahontas Loan Company and Ralston's Mens Shop

The two buildings are a total loss and damage is estimated at least $500 000. Businesses located in these buildings are: Alpine Hotel, Alpine Theater, Kelley's Restaurant, Davis Barber Shop, Quality Discount Shop, Pocahontas Loan Company and Ralston's Mens Shop Also there were two apartments above the Mens Shop. Files and records were saved from the hotel and loan company. supplies and equipment from the barber shop and a large part of the stock from the men's store. Galfords 5 and 10 Store received some water damage and slight damage to the C J and H-P Stores from falling debris and heat.

The firemen want to express their appreciation to the women of the Ladies Auxiliary and many others who supplied hot coffee and food all day long.

The town was extremely fortunate in that wind was light and there was a thick layer of snow to protect the roofs of surrounding buildings. Even so it was doubtful for a time if the fire would be contained to where it finally was. The firemen were badly handicapped, as they have been in our other recent fires in town, by low pressure in the mains. Most of the water used in fighting the fire was pumped from the river. The fire department states that there is not enough water in the city lines to be adequate for even one fire truck.

These recent fires are the first major fires in Marlinton since the Davis Motor Company fire in February, 1956.

Wednesday - After an investigation by E. L. Roush, Deputy Fire Marshal, and Chief Fred Burns, Jr., it was announced Wednesday afternoon that the fire was caused by an electrical short circuit in a wire leading from the main service entrance in the restaurant kitchen area. The starting point of the fire was located in the wall at the left corner of the theater stage behind the screen. The fire

The loss is still estimated at $500,000. This is a conservative figure and replacement cost would be much higher. Not more than ten per cent was covered by insurance.

The State Road Commission will bring equipment in on Thursday to tear down the remaining walls to eliminate the danger of falling bricks.

'Round the World

By Jane Price Sharp

Three hours sleep and off to catch the bus for the airport. Traffic was light so we were early. That was fine because every now and then that gnawing feeling would begin inside that after all this preparation I might miss the plane! Had to sit on my bag to close it but it checked through light at 41 pounds.

Fasten your seat belts, no smoking, and we're off. The TWA Boeing Jet 707 rose smoothly. Noting the flexibility of the wings made you feel much like a bird. An experienced air traveler next to me said the Boeings were noted for being flexible. He had crossed the United States 30 times in the past year and this was my first flight in 30 years and my first time west of the Mississippi! I didn't try to hide my naivete and thoroughly enjoyed everything, being too busy looking to watch the movie.

the United States 30 times in the past year and this was my first flight in 30 years and my first time west of the Mississippi! I didn't try to hide my naivete and thoroughly enjoyed everything, being too busy looking to watch the movie.

The clouds were fascinating and beautiful. Scattered around like cotton balls at first, they became thicker around Front Royal, with just peep holes, like a sea of cotton candy. A little farther they cleared away and the brown and black of the Allegheny ridges spread out below. About 9:40 we were making one of those familiar vapor trails over Marlinton. The non-stop flight was routed on over Charleston, St. Louis, Denver, Los Angeles. The plane was flying 580 miles an hour but there was a headwind of 100 miles an hour to slow us down. We were ahead of schedule, though, five hours later in Los Angeles.

plane was flying 580 miles an hour but there was a head-wind of 100 miles an hour to slow us down. We were ahead of schedule, though, five hours later in Los Angeles.

If things below were as neat as they look from above, it would be wonderful. The neat patterns of fields, roads, housing developments in Maryland and Virginia, the mountains, roads, streams—with the river valleys evenly piled up with morning fog—of mountainous West Virginia on to the flats of the Ohio River Valley—the ground here has a washed or flooded pattern to it. Then the geometric squares of the flat farms, big rivers, mile on mile of straight roads. Hazy, then a solid bank of clouds below, and I miss seeing the Mis sissippi. Now I can watch the movie and try out the different channels of music on the individual earphones.

The stewardesses are most efficient and they soon have a sissippi. Now I can watch the movie and try out the different channels of music on the individual earphones.

The stewardesses are most efficient and they soon have a full course dinner served to the hundred or more passengers.

The clouds break and now they look like icebergs piled around. Below the precise squares of midwest farms, dotted with farm ponds, some contoured fields, mudflats along the rivers, the small creeks and rivers looking like tracings made by an earthworm. In Colorado many of the fields were round, evidently plowed circular within square fencing.

Now the ground was covered with snow and it looked like a giant relief map. We passed a little south of Pike's Peak.

grandeur of the Grand Canyon is impressive, maybe more so than from on the ground. The snow and the mauve coloring were beautiful. Then the blue lakes from the big dams, the Arizona desert country and California.

Not much of the famous Los Angeles smog today but some heavy smoke from an oil tank fire, caused by lightning.

The Los Angeles airport is a city in itself, with each airline having a separate group of buildings; the central control building is a World's Fair type of structure. Buses take you around the big circle but Pan American is right next to TWA so I walked the distance of about a block. Many nationalities are here and directions are printed in Chinese, Spanish, etc. I check in and set my watch back three hours. Large groups crowd to every flight gate.

The Honolulu flight is on a Pan American Boeing Jet 707 also. We fly at 28,000 feet and it takes a little over five hours

The Honolulu flight is on a Pan American Boeing Jet 707 also. We fly at 28,000 feet and it takes a little over five hours for the 2500 miles. The water takes on a solid rough ice look, at first, then as we go higher and farther out it is a most beautiful blue, the famous Pacific blue. And the clouds look like fluffy icebergs floating in the water. Beside me sits a young girl from southern California, going to see her soldier husband, back for a week in Hawaii from Viet Nam.

We first land at Hilo, a new stop for this flight, on the largest but little developed island of the Hawaiian group. Rain clouds cover the island like a saucer. Then on to Honolulu with Christmas lights winding up palm trees.

USS Kitty Hawk (FHTNC) December 28—Ship's Serviceman Seaman Donald E. McCoy, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Hubert H. McCoy, of Beard, and husband of the former Miss Judith A. Starks, of Droop, is serving aboard the U. S. Seventh Fleet attack carrier USS Kitty Hawk off the coast of North Vietnam.

While off the coast of Vietnam the mission of the Kitty Hawk will be the launching of aircraft for strikes against enemy supply and communications lines. The aircraft will also support U. S. and Allied ground forces conducting operations in South Vietnam.

ATTENTION!

TO THE CITIZENS OF POCAHONTAS COUNTY:

The Board of Education has agreed to ask the people of Pocahontas County to support a bond issue to build a central high school for Pocahontas County. Our bonding potential for school construction is $1,195,000 and a decision will have to be made as to how many years we should run this bond issue.

The major question of any tax increase is how much? The following examples will show you how to figure your tax increase on a 10 year bond issue, a 15 year bond issue, and 20 year bond issue.

A 10 year bond issue will increase your taxes 68.32 per cent

A 15 year bond issue will increase your taxes 49.07 per cent

A 20 year bond issue will increase your taxes 41.87 per cent

To figure this on your individual taxes, take your total tax for the year and multiply it by the various percentages. For example, if your taxes amount to $100.00 per year, on a 10 year bond issue, you would pay an additional $68.32 per year for 10 years or $683.20.

On a 15 year bond issue if your taxes were $100.00 you would pay an additional $49.07 per year for 15 years or $736.05.

On a 20 year bond issue for a $100 00 tax ticket you would pay an additional $41.87 per year for 20 years or $837.40.

Listed below is the payback on the $1,195,000 Bond Issue

10 year bond issue $1,849,490

15 year bond issue $1,992.045

20 year bond issue $2,175,440

As you can see it would cost less money for 10 years, however, the tax increase for 10 years is considerable more than for the 15 or 20 year issue.

We need to know which bond issue you, as a taxpayer, would prefer to support. Would you please use the information that I have given you and figure out what it would cost you to support a bond issue and then

Please check your preference and help us make this decision.

I would prefer to support the:

It may be many years before our Federal government will be involved in supplying funds for local public school construction. We cannot afford to wait. We must get started with a building program if we are to meet the needs of our children. Won't you help us to make these very urgent decisions by responding to the question which we are presenting to you.

'Round the World

By Jane Price Sharp

After fresh pineapple juice and leis at the airport, we checked in at the Moana Hotel on Waikiki Beach, and had breakfast the next morning under the Banyan Tree! But first, that night, we had time to visit the shops, International Market Place, etc. A quick change to summer clothes was necessary for the 80 degree temperature. It was the first nice weather for several weeks, they said. At 10:30 bedtime, the realization came that it had been a long day—at home it would be 3:30 A. M.

The colorful muu-muus were everywhere, native and visitor alike. (It is not pronounced like the sound of a cow but each part divides into two syllables).

Two nice sounding words are the well-known aloha, meaning both hello and goodbye or to show affection, and mahalo, meaning thanks.

Thursday we joined a tour of the Island Oahu, on which Honolulu is located. Our guide was jovial Keoni. We headed up through the rain forest, with lush tropical growth, where the rainfall averages an inch a day. There are no snakes nor poison ivy on the islands but beautiful flowering trees, beautiful flowers and shrubs, lush foliage, philodendron leaves bigger than a meat platter, orchid plants along tree limbs, poinsettias, banana trees, papaya trees, coconut palms (they take seven years to bear, then produce a continuous, year 'round crop).

This island is about 26 by 40 miles, (600 square miles), has 600,000 people. The military is the largest source of income, construction is second, tourists income, third, sugar cane, fourth and pineapple, fifth.

is the largest source of income, construction is second, tourists income, third, sugar cane, fourth and pineapple, fifth.

Sugar cane takes 24 months to mature, and so there are fields of all different stages of growth. All sugar cane work is now done by machinery: preparing the fields, planting, harvesting. It takes a lot of irrigation for sugar and the rows are like trenches. One pound of sugar requires one ton of water. As the cane ripens, the water is cut off and the heavy growth dries out and the fields are burned. The cane is hard and is not damaged and the bugs, rodents and fodder problem are taken care of. One and a half million tons of crude sugar is produced and taken to California for refining.

The pineapple plant bears for four years, the individual pineapple taking eighteen months to mature. Slips are taken from the old plants, turned upside down for 2 weeks, and then planted through rows of plastic four inches apart. One man can plant 8,000 a day The old plants are cut and the fields burned, then plowed over

We visited Pali Overlook, a sheer cliff over which the first king pushed the opposing forces, Traders Halls', the Mormon Temple, a Buddhist Temple Schoffield Barracks, and back to Pearl Harbor.

We got back too late for a ride in an outrigger canoe so we'll save that for the next time, but we did go swimming.

Christmas decorations are everywhere and Christmas carols are heard over the radio and by entertainers. Most trees are artificial as the real ones have to be imported. Many of the trees are flocked white. We called to greet the Frank Callenders, formerly of Green Bank. They sent their regards to everyone. A little shopping, a few cards and it was time to go to the airport. This time it was Japan Air Lines for eight and a half hours, 3 910 miles to Tokyo. We moved our watches back five hours and saw December 22 become December 23 as we crossed the International Date Line, two hours and fifty minutes out of Honolulu. After we moved past the green waters a few hundred feet out from the beaches, it was the seemingly endless blue of the Pacific, dotted with the iceberg clouds.

Mr. Cornelius is a graduate in agricultural education from North Carolina State University and received his theological training at Columbia Theological Seminary in Decatur, Georgia. He and his wife are both natives of Newton, North Carolina. They have four children.

The Tower Room Scholars plan, made possible by a foundation grant, was begun in the realization that pastors need not only to study at home but also to have occasional opportu nity for extended research nity for extended research, a chance to reflect and interpret meanings, and expert guidance on a seminary campus.

The Tower Room program gets the pastors away from the schedules that make systematic study difficult to achieve. Each of the group of seven to ten engages in his own intensive study in a "Tower Room" of the Seminary library.

Each day they meet with a faculty member to discuss recent developments in theology and the world, particularly as those changes affect the pastor and his effective ministry.

Now in its tenth year, the Tower Room Scholars Program is one of six phases of the Seminary's Continuing Education Program. That program seeks to enable pastors to become more effective through sustained systematic study. The pastors are usually chosen from the four Synods that own and control UTS—Appalachia, North Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Aboriginal Remains In Pocahontas County

By Dr. N. R. Price

Taken from a January 11, 1912 issue of The Pocahontas Times.

As stated in my former letter I have been an investigator of aboriginal remains in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, and have made a collection of several thousand fine specimens of Indian stone relics. These investigations and collections have extended over a period of twenty-five years, during which time I have visited every part of the County where camping sites were reported to exist, and have visited nearly every earth work or mound.

My observations and the traditional history of early settlers of this region led me to believe that there were no permanent settlements in this part, that is to say that the region was visited by Indians only in their migratory fashion, or perhaps at certain seasons

Pocahontas County has the distinction of having the greatest elevation of any county in the state, and giving rise to more streams than any other: the headwaters of the Greenbrier, the Elk, Cheat, Williams River, Cranberry, Gauley and several others of less importance. the crooked fork of Elk River. The valley of Knapps Creek was followed to the junction with Douthards Creek fourteen miles to the crossing of the main Allegheny range to the waters of Jackson's River in Bath County, Virginia. All of these are today main highways of travel, and within historical times armed bands of marauding Indians from the Ohio country have been pursued by the avenging pioneers of the Valley and Augusta, Virginia. The other great highway for the aboriginees in crossing to the Ohio from what now constitutes the State of Virginia was to follow the valleys of the New and Kanawha Rivers, about seventy miles to the south.

At Marlinton there are numerous evidences of long occupancy. Within a few hundred yards of the courthouse there is a mound of considerable dimerous evidences of long occupancy. Within a few hundred yards of the courthouse there is a mound of considerable dimensions, although about obliterated by the plow. Within the memory of persons now living it was about ten feet in height. Another mound of earth and stone is situated in the bottom lands near the river. and near the residence of Mr. C. W. Price. From this mound were removed within the past year the remains of at least seven adult skeletons. These had been buried in a manner that indicated that all the bodies had been thrown together and earth heaped on them, or else at some time the skeletons had been disturbed, and afterwards returned to the mound and covered up. There is no record of the mound having been disturbed, except on the surface by the erosive effect of the cultivation of the soil in the surrounding fields, and the skeletons were discovered in and indicate adult males in the prime of life. Early tradition has it that a battle was fought at this point between the Indians and that the dead were buried in this mound. It may be that the bones were disturbed in the mound at an early date in the settlement of the country by the whites and the tradition grew out of the fact that so many skeletons were found together in one burial place. My paternal great grand father owned and cleared the fields where these two mounds are situate, but there is no special family history of them. It is possible that in the stress of winning this country from the revengeful Indian that little value was placed on the mounds as evidence of the earlier occupiers of the soil, and the forests were cleared from them and the mounds leveled by the plow as soon as it was practicable for them to do so.

It is certain that early settlers regarded them as entirely the work of the Indian tribes then in possession of the country, or their immediate forbears, as the word "Indian mound," in general use even to this day, sufficiently proves.

My only opinion is that the Indians as known to historic times were in the habit of throwing up mounds, generally in the neighborhood of their camps, to commemorate some special occasion, as the death of a number of men in battle, or the grave of a distinguished man in the tribe. However, I do not remember to have read that any of the mounds of which I have heard were freshly built at the time of their discovery by the whites. On the contrary, all of which there is any record of early discovery bore the signs of great antiquity, being covered with an ancient growth of forest trees.

A large mound four miles below Marlinton on the top of a high hill, in the primeval forest, has never been disturbed except for a hole sunk from the top about six feet to the level of the surrounding earth, at which depth a thick layer of ashes was found. A very large oak growing on this mound was uprooted many years ago, and tore away a part of one side. This mound is composed of earth and stones, all the stones having been conveyed a distance of several hundred feet, as there is none in the immediate vicinity of the mound. There is probably thirty or forty tons of loose rock in this mound. It is near the mouth of Swago Creek and many relics and other signs of occupancy have been noted in the fields near this mound and in the region surrounding.

At Clover Lick, on the Warwick estate, there are several mounds of the usual form and size. These are at the mouth of Clover Creek, and was a famous resort for Indians, a trail leading from Clover Creek valley through the Rider Gap and Big Spring Gap to the waters of Old Field Fork and Big Spring Fork of Elk River, respectively. One of these mounds was opened about one hundred years ago by the late Jacob Warwick, a first settler, an Indian fighter who was at the battle of Point Pleasant, 1774, a veteran of the Revolution. The well preserved bones of an adult were found in a sitting posture, face to the west, and several articles of stone and metal. All was left undisturbed and the burial place left as it was found. and several articles of stone and metal. All was left undisturbed and the burial place left as it was found. Succeeding years and a century's or more cultivation of the soil have about obliterated these mounds. Many relics have been found in the fields surrounding these mounds.

A small mound of earth and stone at the mouth of Locust Creek was visited by the writer a few years ago. A short time before a skeleton had been discovered in this mound but no other relics. There are a few mounds in the vicinity of Dunmore and Green Bank in the upper part of Pocahontas County, but the writer has never seen them.

There is no evidence that the Indians traveled far into what was a dense forest back from the Greenbrier River and its branches and tributaries. In fact in the fields that have in late years been cleared and cultivated on the uplands and branches and tributaries. In fact in the fields that have in late years been cleared and cultivated on the uplands and higher mountains only rarely are the arrow points discovered, such as might have been lost in the chase, while nearly every field on the low lands is thickly strewn with these evidences of early occupancy, and at some of camp sites mentioned thousands of arrow points and other relics have been collected after the plowing of the fields, and the soil continues to yield an apparently undiminished supply to those who care to look for them.

Flint, the usual material for the manufacture of arrow points and spear heads is native to the limestone formation of the county, and several beds are known to have been worked. It is well marked even in a small photograph made from a slight elevation and of which I enclose a copy.

Dunmore Community Center

Next time you drive by Dunmore Community, notice how nice the community center is beginning to look. The latest improvement has been installing some new windows and replacing all broken and damaged window panes. The sponsoring group for this project was the Dunmore Home Demonstration Club.

This may sound like a simple procedure, not so! The windows happen to be oversize, and it seemed for a time that the new sash would have to be built from "scratch." Luck was on the side of the project—just enough new sash that had been in storage a long long time was found in one of the stores in Marlinton. Window panes can of course be that had been in storage a long long time was found in one of the stores in Marlinton. Window panes can of course be cut, so that was no problem.

The next undertaking was to get the work done. It some times turns out to be very difficult to find someone to do the work, even where there is money on hand to pay for it. As it happens one of the club member's husband is a carpenter; even though he is retired and does very little custom work, she persuaded him to do the work.

All new framing had to be installed in one window, and part on another before the new sash could be set in. Other repairs were made on framing and window panes replaced. It took several hours, but a good job was done. The carpenter made a liberal donation on a very reasonable labor bill

How did we make the money to pay for the labor and materials? We sponsored a Community Square Dance at the munity Square Dance at the Community Center, with a refreshment stand for the evening. There were home made candy, cookies, pies, also hot dogs and cokes. Enough money was taken in from this one venture to pay all bills with some left over.

We are lucky to have in our community a musical group, called the "Quadreelers," who made the music for the Square Dance.

It is remarkable what can be done when people are of one mind.

Coming in over Japan the hills look to be covered about half with evergreens of some sort; the valleys or hollows are leveled and terraced neatly.

The pilot hit the runway of the Tokyo International Airport with a good bump. One thing about airports—you get a lot of exercise walking. Got through customs and immigration quickly—I wouldn't have looked through that suitcase either for things would never have fitted back into place; had to get money changed into yen for limousine ticket to Okura Inter continental Hotel, which was a nice place to stay. The Japanese are very polite, always bowing. The first word picked out was hie for yes. Almost everybody knew enough English to understand me. Tokyo has a monorail, express roads, street cars and buses, and excellent trains that run on time throughout Japan as a matter of pride. None of the streets are straight for any distance. A surprising thing was mirrors on blind street corners to enable the driver to see approaching cars.

On every street sign there was "Merry Christmas." Beautiful Christmas trees and lovely flower arrangements—an art in Japan. In the hotel lobby there was a circular arrangement of perhaps a hundred poinsettias. The bakery chef had made a replica of a Paris cathedral in sugar frosting. On Saturday night the elite of Tokyo gathered for a big Christmas banquet. Most of the women came in colorful kimonos but many came in western dress.

Tokyo gathered for a big Christmas banquet. Most of the women came in colorful kimonos but many came in western dress.

Radio reception was excellent with channels for different, types of music (one was country style) and one for news. Lovely Christmas carols in both English and Japanese. The Japanese versions still had the words Merry Christmas, Jingle Bells, Hallelujah. If the Japanese don't have a word for something, they incorporate the American word in their language. A change in flight schedule cut out a proposed sightseeing trip (with personal guide and taxi for $3.25 an hour) but I did get to the Tokyo Tower to see the sun set glow behind Mount Fuji and to see the lights come on Saturday evening. Tokyo is the world's largest city, with over 11,000,000 people. As the lights twinkled on it looked like a giant Christmas tree circle. DUNCAN LANE

A WAR TIME INCIDENT

Which Occurred on Stony Creek 1861

By the Rev. William T. Price

(From The Pocahontas Times, September 8, 1904)

Among the incidents of the war between the States one of the most likely to be remembered by Pocahontas people was that which occurred at Duncan's Lane, now better known as West Union, head of Stony Creek, the last Monday morning of October 1861.

From information communicated by William Gay, near Hamlin Chapel and Charles L. Moore, Brown's Creek, I compile the following sketch of this notable skirmish between Pocahontas citizens and neighbors. Gay was a Unionist and Moore a Confederate.

Colonel Samuel Young, eldest son of the late Captain William Young, of Stony Creek, appeared in the vicinity of Edray in command of a detachment of West Virginia Scouts. It appears that he was advised by the residents that one of the best things he could do would be to raid Herold's distillery on Douthards Creek, four or five miles east of Hunt-

It appears that he was advised by the residents that one of the best things he could do would be to raid Herold's distillery on Douthards Creek, four or five miles east of Huntersville, and retire by way of Back Allegheny if attacked by the Confederates.

Upon coming to the bridge at Marlinton and seeing a Confederate scout galloping up the bottom, Colonel Young thinking that his presence being now known, concluded it would be best not to attempt the raid in view, but withdraw by way of Kee's hacking to the head of Dry Branch of Swago and thence have facilities for falling back to Williams River and retreat by way of Webster County if forced to do so by overwhelming odds.

In the meantime Captain Joseph C. Gay, who had been instructed to scout upper Pocahontas, heard that the Unionists were expected on Swago, where Daniel Kellison and Peter Beverage were preparing beef for their use. He rallied about twenty men at

He rallied about twenty men at Verdant Valley, now Harter. C. L. Moore, a member of the 31st Virginia, being at home on furlough, volunteered as one of the scouting party.

The party was on the move early Sunday morning, came down the Greenbrier River by Marlinton, along the public road to Kee's thence across by the Joe Buckley place to Daniel Kellison's.

By dinner time Gay's party reached Kellison's and took a Sunday dinner with that hospitable citizen as Gay had proposed to his men upon leaving Verdant Valley.

While Captain Gay and his party were taking dinner and were enjoying their restful smoke at Kellison's, Colonel Young was at the bridge as mentioned previously.

Captain Gay concluded to spend the night in the Levels and then return to take breakfast with Peter Beverage early Monday morning. This worthy citizen lived some miles farther up the Swago Dry Branch.

So after their much enjoyed dinner Gay's party went on to the Levels, where they disbanded and found lodging with different families near Mill Point.

Monday morning Gay's men assembled before day, as agreed upon as to be in time for breakfast at Peter Beverage's, retracing the way to Kellison's and going up to Swago towards Beverage's. Upon coming in sight of the house a Union picket was noticed and the party halted for consultation. Whereupon it was decided not to advance until something could be ascertained of the strength of the Unionists.

When ready for action Captain Gay instructed C. L. Moore with twelve men to charge the dwelling, while Captain Gay with the remainder would wait on the flanks to intercept any that might run from the house.

In the meantime by some wireless means the Unionists had learned something and vacated the premises and so when Moore reached the house none were in sight. Moore was emphatically assured by the "women folks" that "not a Yankee had been around" for they would "know better than to come about where they lived."

With all their respect for the ladies, however, the scouts in gray were incredulous and after some searching a fresh trail was discovered which the Confederates followed in direction of William Beverage's where the Unionists were seen making

Gay's men seeing it would not be prudent to show themselves lay down in the grass and awaited developments.

The Unionists took the honey and crossed over the crest of the mountain while the Confederates came to the house and found Mrs. Beverage "out of fix" about her bees and she told all she knew as to who

According to the best of her knowledge there were thirty two or thirty three men led by Colonel Sam Young and Captain Walter Allen. About this time matters were so interesting that the Confederates forgot all about the breakfast they had been coming for since before daylight.

Upon leaving her the Confederates took the trail leading down the ravine towards Henry Duncan's. The Confederates were following "at will," strung out along the trail, with C. L. Moore and James Shannon some distance in the lead. These two suddenly came up with William Kennison in the rear of the Unionists and but a few steps ahead of them. Shannon was for shooting Kennison down in his tracks but Moore objected as the rest of the Confederates were too far back to make it prudent to bring on a fight against such odds as two against thirty three. Being too close to speak for fear of being overheard Moore pulled Shannon's gun back to keep him from shooting and making

Being too close to speak for fear of being overheard Moore pulled Shannon's gun back to keep him from shooting and making him hold off until the others might come up. Soon as all had come up a skirmish line was formed and when the fringe of the woods was reached the Unionists were discover ed in the opening, bunched up or moving in single file in close order.

Inadvertently someone of the Confederates fired and the Unionists at once faced about and delivered a volley. To this the Confederates replied and charged with yells and the Unionists dispersed. Part of the Unionists led by Captain Allen went to the right, made charged with yells and the Unionists dispersed. Part of the Unionists led by Captain Allen went to the right, made a stand and were firing upon the Confederates, whereupon Captain Gay instructed Moore to dislodge them and he attempted to do so by moving up in the face of Allen's firing. Some of the others deployed still farther to the right so as to flank.

Moore crossed a fence and discharged his musket, reserving his revolver for close quarters, but the Unionists withdrew pursued by Moore and his party in the direction of the Duncan home at which they made a stand and passed some words with the Confederates.

The Unionsts were heard to exclaim that "one rebel had been busted." This was denied by Moore and after a fierce interchange of shots the Unionists disappeared in the direction of West Union.

The Unionsts were heard to exclaim that "one rebel had been busted." This was denied by Moore and after a fierce interchange of shots the Unionists disappeared in the direction of West Union.

This skirmish was a surprise and began about 10 o'clock in the morning and the Unionists that I have talked with give Captain Allen, Lum Silva and the four or five others who crossed the field and opened fire on the Confederates flank and checked the charge, the credit of enabling the party to get away. While the Confederates were held in check Colonel Young attempted to rally behind a large red oak log, but was supported by one soldier, John Armstrong, who being soon wounded in the arm, he and the Colonel followed the rest towards the Duncan home thence deployed to the left towards West Union.

The lamented Bernard Sharp was mortally wounded by the opening Confederate volley, James Rogers was wounded in the thigh. Moffatt Wanless received a slight wound in the shoulder and William Gay my informant, lost his blanket.

Clark Dilley fired from West Union schoolhouse at a Confederate beyond Duncan's barn and he was seen to fall. This is supposed to have been the only Confederate casualty and my information is to the effect that this wounded Confederate was the late Davis Kennison, Esq., near Academy

As a result of this skirmish Colonel Young's detachment became separated. Some were with Captain Allen, the others were with Colonel Young. The party with Allen at once made their escape to Elk by way of Red Lick Pass.

Colonel Young's party became bewildered, veered around during the night and found themselves at Andy Taylor's on Laurel Run about two miles from the bloody exciting scenes of the previous day.

With William Gay as pilot the party renewed the attempt at escape and reached the divide between Crooked Fork and Gauley by way of Spruce Knob.

Upon gaining this point Colonel Young came to the front and took the lead once more. It soon became evident that he was in danger of repeating the maneuvers of the preceding day and had to be closely watched and politely cautioned.

Finally all came out at John B. Hannah's, the old field fork of Elk. This incident touchingly illustrates how strangely people will act in war times.

Yet the history of humanity shows beyond a doubt, that nothing great or good has ever been attained in human uplifting and progress, except by bloodshed.

There must be something unspeakably wrong with the human body politic if such be the antidote that really avails to quiet the terrible delirium that a state of war implies.

Fires, Flood, Age Make Marlinton's School Needs Critical

By Stanley Green
Staff Writer

MARLINTON — On March 3, 1947, water rose knee deep in an unfinished room and a few hours later 36 per cent of Marlinton was covered by 15.5 feet of water.

The cafeteria which served both Marlinton high and junior high schools was destroyed.

On June 22, fire broke out in the building housing the junior high school and board of education offices. Ninety per cent of the structure was destroyed.

On July 26, fire caused an additional $40,000 damage to the same building.

On September 28, fire destroyed eight teaching stations, the auditorium and offices of Marlinton High School. Thirty per cent of the building was left usable.

"The school system has suffered its share of the more than $2 million damage from the flood and the 42 fires in Marlinton during the past two years," Supt. Grey M. Cassell says. "The county has been in desperate need of a school building program for sometime. Now it's absolutely necessary. A start must be made to meet the critical situation."

The Pocahontas Board of Education is going to voters to approve a $1,100,000 bond issue to construct, furnish and equip a central high school and to purchase new school buses. The proposal will appear on the May 14 primary ballot to serve the school system the cost of a separate election.

"The last building program was in 1948, when the board office, which also housed six junior high school classes, was constructed with funds from a special legislative appropriation," Cassell points out. "Pocahontas County has not been asked to vote on a school bond issue or special levy since the county school system went into effect in the early 1930s."

ALMOST ALL the county's nine schools are more than 30 years old, he says, and most are small. Marlinton High School has 329 students, Green Bank High has 107 and Hillsboro High has 102. Both Marlinton and Hillsboro have lost their accreditation and Hillsboro, according to Cassell, doesn't offer enough courses to enable its graduates to enter college.

"We feel we could do a much better job in a larger centralized high school," Cassell says. "We could give the students a modern educational program. Bonding potential is limited — we are asking for the maximum — and won't provide enough money to build

'Orderly Protest' Urged in America

BLUEFIELD — U. S. Judge Robert E. Maxwell, addressing himself to the citizen protest, made a case here Wednesday for "orderly protest" as a basic and necessary right in the American system of government.

Speaking to a Law Day audience of lawyers he said "There is nothing in the entire system of American jurisprudence which denies an individual the right to protest for its expression. "It is," he said, "a tradition in America to insure that points of view at odds with prevailing doctrine will not be rejected or suppressed."

The Pocahontas County Board of Education is asking voters to approve a $1,195,000 bond issue to construct, furnish and equip a central high school and to purchase new school buses. The proposal will appear on the May 14 primary ballot to save the school system the cost of a separate election.

"The last building program was in 1948, when the board office, which also housed six junior high school classes, was constructed with funds from a special legislative appropriation," Cassell points out. ...e schools that are necessary. A new high school, however, would be a major improvement."

Green Bank and Hillsboro, plus what's left of Marlinton High, would be used for grades one through eight after construction of a new high school. At present, the 1,472 children in those grades are housed in six schools.

"We are awaiting a report from the state fire marshal as to the safety of Marlinton Elementary School as well as the remaining portion of the high school," Cassell says. "If the elementary school is closed, 450 students will be without classrooms."

The school system had to purchase six portable classrooms, costing $40,000, to house the junior high school students whose classrooms were destroyed by fire. Some of the Marlinton High School students have been taught in a church basement and in the American Legion Hall since the fire at the school. A nine-classroom complex is under construction for them now and could be used for displaced Marlinton Elementary School students after constuction of a central high school.

"The students," Cassell says, "deserve much credit for the way they've reacted under such trying circumstances. Townspeople have helped a great deal also. Through contributions of money, materials and labor, a school cafeteria is under construction. To top it all off, with a football field damaged by the flood, the Marlinton High School football team won the state Class A Championship with an 11-0 record and, without a gymnasium in which to play their home games, the basketball team was runner-up in the Class A competition.

"The people of the community and Pocahontas County are not giving up. With a new consolidated high school as the first step forward, we'll be moving toward unification of a proud rural area."

The Bond Issue

We, the Senior members of the National Honor Society of Green Bank High School would like to express our views concerning the bond issue.

All the advantages for consolidation of high schools in this county are too numerous to mention here but we wish to emphasize the more important points.

The students benefit from the additional courses offered because they can choose those subjects which will best prepare them for their futures. Not only college-bound students benefit but also those desiring vocational or business courses.

There are more activities and sports for students to participate in and broaden their interests in the school.

The new school will not be so large that students are known only to teachers as numbers but will be large enough to terests in the school.

The new school will not be so large that students are known only to teachers as numbers but will be large enough to provide the advantages of a first class high school.

State scholastic competition will be more available to the student body and they will have the educational back ground necessary to be success ful in science fairs, band festivals, debates and other events.

Not only do high school students benefit but so does the county. Businesses, in scouting new areas, always investigate the educational system available to families of their employees.

New industries attract people to the county, increasing population; and both high school and college graduates will be inclined to remain in their home county, if it offers job opportunities.

The county wide high school will assist in giving the residents of West Virginia better educated people and a greater number of them. These people will dispel the image of West Virginia as a "Backward State" and give us the good

We feel the cost of the new school will be slight in comparison to the waste of human resources available in this county, if by some chance the bond issue would be defeated.

Senior Class Play—Outdoor Drama

A unique feature of Marlinton High's Senior Class Play is the fact that it will be presented on the football field outdoors. "The Great Big Doorstep" which was first produced on Broadway in 1942 is a comedy in three acts about the Crochets and the magnificent doorstep they found floating down the Mississippi River. They set it up in front of their poor little shanty, and from then on, with both humor and pathos, they're trying to live up to their great big doorstep.

Directed by Mrs. Florence Bailey and Loren Jackson, the cast includes:

Roger Madison
Paula Layman
Darrell Friel
Libby Graham
Brenda Shinaberry
Freda Hefner
Sally McLaughlin
Herbie McClure
Daniel Hammonds
David Peacock

Mine Accident

John Moore, Jr., of Buckeye, was one of twenty-five men trapped in a Gauley Coal and Coke Mine at Hominy Falls, Nicholas County, Monday when miners broke through a wall into an abandoned mine and water rushed into the shaft. Fifteen men were safe in higher elevations but little hope was held for ten men at the site of the breakthrough.

Joe Fitzwater, of Rupert, was also in the mine. He is a brother of Mrs. Ann Cohenour, of Campbelltown.

It is hoped they are in the safe group.

VOTE

Election Day is next Tuesday. We hope it will be the day that the people of Pocahontas decide to join together and start moving education forward. We urge you to vote "Yes" on the school bond issue. Many can find some fault or other, but this central school has been studied and proposed by a state education committee, two University educators, our elected Board of Education and our County Superintendent—it is the best they have been able to plan. Our students need practical job training in mechanics, welding, business machines, etc., as well as a wider selection of academic subjects. We will lose our Federal and State vocational building money unless the bond issue is passed.

You have heard all this—maybe too much has been said. We think the issue has been well presented. Tuesday is the day for action. Remember, it takes sixty per cent of the voters' approval.

From "Bill" Gardner . . .

My name is William C. "Bill" Gardner, and I have filed as a Republican candidate for Sheriff of Pocahontas County, West Virginia, as you will note from advertisement found elsewhere in this paper.

I was born and reared at Clover Lick, attended local schools, and graduated from Marlinton High School in 1938. I am a member of Grace Episcopal Church. My mother is Catherine H. Gardner, of the same community. My father, William C. Gardner, is deceased. My wife is the former Pauline Buzzard, of Huntersville, and we have four children—a daughter, Carol Ann Mullenax, of Durbin, three sons, Rodney W., a student at WVU, R. Lee, at home, and Fredric P., a student at Green Bank High School.

I have been a farmer, logger and heavy equipment operator all of my adult life. I am also a veteran of World War II, having served in the Navy at that time. I am also a strong supporter of our local organization.

This is the first time that I have sought public office, as I feel that more people should become involved in such affairs. The only promise that I make is that I will be diligent, honest, and fair in the execution of the duties of the office to which I aspire.

Regarding the School Bond Levy ...

It has come to my attention that the report is being circulated that I am against the school bond levy.

As a citizen and candidate for the Democratic County Executive Committee, I am for anything for the betterment of Pocahontas County, which, naturally, includes the school issue.

I believe in everyone voting his own opinion on any question and mine, for the school levy, IS FOR IT!

LIKE other eastern states, the area now known as West Virginia was bountifully endowed by nature with a tremendous wealth of timber. Little information has been compiled about logging operations that wiped out virgin stands around the turn of the century.

This was due largely to the fact that small—and large—operations would cut out their timber stands and move on to other locations. In the move itself, records often were destroyed, and when families were uprooted, valuable pictures and mementos were lost or left behind.

Dr. Roy B. Clarkson, associate professor of biology at West Virginia University, has agreed to use of material and pictures found in his book, "Tumult on the Mountains—Lumbering in West Virginia, 1770-1920." Copyright on the book is held by McClain Printing Company of Parsons.

Clarkson, a native of Cass, Pocahontas County, grew up with the sound of whining saws, the whistle of Shay engines and the smell of newly-sawn spruce or hardwood lumber as constant companions. While a senior at Greenbank High School, he started working Saturdays on the Mower Lumber Company mill, and began full-time work there the day after graduating from high school.

Bear Meeting

If there had been any illusion in Charleston that Pocahontas farmers weren't vitally concerned about the bear refuge in the Back Country, it was dispelled Monday night when a hundred fifty or more interested citizens met with Director of Natural Resources T. R. Samsell. Samsell was noticeably on the defensive as he explained his Department's responsibility under law for all of the renewable resources of the State of West Virginia, which include game, for the good of all 1,800,000 of her citizens; the latest addition to its responsibility was control and reclamation of strip mining areas. The Department has 645 employees for enforcement, parks, game and fish, water control, etc.

Mr. Samsell presented information concerning the game program and then fairly and sympathetically heard all opinions and comments.

Mr. Samsell presented information concerning the game program and then fairly and sympathetically heard all opinions and comments.

First he had Jim Ruckol explain the Southeastern Disease Cooperative Project, with veterinarians and other research people from the University of Georgia making a study of diseases and parasites of our wildlife, also in Michigan, Maryland and Kentucky. They studied 23 deer a few years ago and are taking 15 or 20 grouse a year plus entrails of wild turkeys during hunting season, for microscopic examination. These studies will cover 10 to 20 years.

Wayne Bailey told of the livetrapping and banding of 1500 to 2000 turkeys for study of their range and life habits, leading to better hunting regulations. Also, he said some 275 turkeys – 20 or 30 a year, mostly out of Watoga State Park—had been moved to other counties until now most every county had some turkeys. Over half the plantings did reasonably well. Some were exchanged with Illinois for deer. None has been moved for the last two or three years.

Some deer, also from Watoga, had been moved, about 20.

All of this led to the meat of the program—bear.

Pete Zurbach estimated the

All of this led to the meat of the program—bear.

Pete Zurbach estimated the bear population in West Virginia at about 500, which is concentrated in the eastern section, including Pocahontas, but bear have been sighted in all counties, now coming back in deserted coal areas. The kill in West Virginia averages around 50 compared to 100 to 400 in Virginia. He estimated bear hunters spend $1,300,000 each yea', making those bears worth about 2600. (In comparison, the sheep industry is worth three to four million dollars.) The main breeding places are Otter Creek, in Randolph, Flat Rock, Tucker, the Cheat area and Cranberry Back Country, and the eastern edge of Monroe.

Samsell reviewed efforts at legislation for compensation for bear losses and other desirable regulations but none of this passed the Legislature.

All kinds of questions and comm nts were he rd, one concerning the beech trees on the National Forest, on which may be Vearl Haynes will give us a report later. In this connection he defended the evenage management, or clear-cutting, of forest land. On the Marlinton

Sherman Beard, Harvey Galford and Bert McMillion gave actual examples of how the 100,000 acre bear refuge is a real threat to their livelihood, forcing them to abandon thousands of acres of good grazing land.

Tom Edgar suggested that the boundary of the refuge area be moved back.

Argile Arbogast and others were seeking a clarification as to whether or not they could pursue a sheep killing bear into the refuge. Mr. Samsell would not state that was permissible now.

After much discussion, Mr. Samsell summarized as follows:

There Ain't No G in Marlinton

A smart and stylish man was he,
He had a college-bought degree,
He wished to buy some timber land,
And so he took his pen in hand,
But when it all was said and done,
He hurt his friend in Marlinton,
He did a capital crime you see,
Spelling Marlinton with a G.

There ain't no G in Marlinton,
There ain't no G in Marlinton,
There ain't no G in Marlinton,
There ain't no G in Marlinton.

Jacob Marlin, a hunter bold,
Settled here in days of old,
He camped in a hollow tree,
And spelled his name with nary G.
His partner, a hunter, also came,
Stephen B. Sewell, was his name,
The year was seventeen-fifty-one,
They founded the town of Marlinton.

While they dwelt in solitude,
Sewell got in an ugly mood;
He took his knife and on a tree,
Cut M A R L I N G.
Then Jacob Marlin, mighty quick,
Fell on him like a thousand brick,
For it always riled his family,
For folks to spell the name with G.

Old Jacob Marlin died in bed,
Sewell--the Indians killed him dead.
It was an awful fate, but he
Was prone to use the extra G.
Let all take warning from his fate,
And when our town they designate,
They sure must mind their p's and q's,
This awful G we can't excuse.

Boys and Girls in Service

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Arbogast:

It is my great pleasure to inform you of the recent advancement of your son, Samuel, to Aviation Machinist's Mate (Jet) First Class. This certainly is a most noteworthy achievement and particularly indicative of his ability and fine character as a man.

The Navy's system of advancement is complex but thoroughly comprehensive, justly fair, and extremely effective in selecting only the best qualified individuals for positions of greater responsibility. The selection process becomes all the more impressive when one considers the large number of men competing for the relatively few positions within the Petty Officer ranks. You can be assured that the Navy has many good men and they all put forth their very best effort in anticipation of qualifying for advancement. Therefore, for Samuel to attain his advancement, he had to excel over many deserving and qualified men. He succeeded in answering this challenge by exerting additional individual effort in the study of technical and professional subjects, in the application of acquired skills, and in his consistent excellence in military behavior. You may be justifiably proud of your son.

I have personally congratulated Samuel, and I speak for the officers and men of Training Squadron TWENTY-TWO, when I say that we are privileged to have Samuel as a member of our command, and we share with you the pride and pleasure of his accomplishment

Sincerely,

W. F. Moore

Glen H. Reynolds was promoted to the rank of Major in the Air National Guard in Charleston last week. Mr. Reynolds, son of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Reynolds, of Slatyfork, is sales manager for Appalachian Power Company in Bluefield, Virginia. He served in Korea in the Marines, afterwards graduating in electronic engineering from West Virginia Tech, receiving a commission in the Air Force, where he served for four years. His wife is the former Pauline Stovall, of Montgomery; they have four children, Hal, Jim, Susan and Drew. This promotion broke the record cited in the Air Guard Magazine of Mrs. Reynold's being the only mother with three sons as captains in the Air Force, the other two being Captain William L. Reynolds, of Charleston, and Captain Harold Tucker Reynolds, of Germany, who will return to the United States August 15.

Swimming Pool

The Pocahontas Recreation Association, Inc., has been organized to provide a place near home where families can enjoy, under supervision and instruction, the healthful benefits of outdoor swimming facilities.

This Association is a private, non-profit corporation, organized to construct, own and operate a swimming pool and other recreational facilities in an area in or near the Town of Marlinton that will meet FHA approval.

The facilities, which are subject to change based on final members, are planned as follows:

A pool 42'x82' and a kiddie pool. In addition there will be a sun deck area and bath house facilities complete with showers. dressing rooms, rest rooms, and a concession stand that will serve hot food. This area will be completely enclosed with a cyclone fence. There will be ample parking facilities and sufficient ground for future expansion which would include a picnic area, tennis, playground, and other recreational facilities.

Consulting engineering services will be contracted with a nationally known firm in order a picnic area, tennis, playground, and other recreational facilities.

Consulting engineering services will be contracted with a nationally known firm in order to assure us the most modern design, equipment and facilities

Initial membership will cost $100. It is anticipated that late joiners will pay more. Everyone would prefer a public pool rather than a membership pool, but the FHA requires memberships to guarantee maintenance and repayment of loan.

It is estimated that the annual dues will be $50. per family. This money will be used to pay a pool manager who will supervise the necessary lifeguards for the protection of you and your children. In addition it will pay for all utilities, chemicals costs, insurance, loan repayment, maintenance and other incidental costs, in the operation of the facility.

Financing of the membership cost on a personal installment note basis may be arranged, spreading it over a year.

We want our pool for the coming season. Final F.H.A. approval will be made as soon as the necessary memberships are obtained. Upon approval of loan, construction contract

Marli nton Project

Last Wednesday a meeting of the Marlinton Town Council, representatives from the Economic Development office in Huntington and the Federal Water Pollution Control, several men from the International Shoe Company, Don McGuire, engineer for the town and Sam Hill, coordinator for the Pocahontas Planning and Zoning Commission, seemed to make some progress on the long road to improvements in the water supply and sewerage treatment plant for Marlinton. This project has been worked on for about six years. Meeting face to face seemed the best way to find out what needed to be done. The Tannery agreed to participate in the project and the date of August 10 was set for the engineer to complete plans and forms for EDA.

The town was assured of a grant of $140,000 from the FWPA; the balance would be borrowed for EDA; the total project will cost about $750,000 and will include larg-

The town was assured of a grant of $140,000 from the FWPA; the balance would be borrowed for EDA; the total project will cost about $750,000 and will include larger water lines and more storage tanks and collection and treatment of sewage, with capacity for the services to be extended to neighboring areas. The improvements would necessitate an increase in water rates but already we face increased insurance rates if better water supply to our hydrants isn't made. The project is a necessity if we are to attract industry; also serious interest by an industry will practically assure the loan.

The Federal Water Pollution official commended the Town for making this move to keep from polluting the river and gladly approved the giving of the $140,000 for this purpose.

The role of the Nergo in history

"BLACK HISTORY: A REAPPRAISAL" edited with Commentary by Melvin Drimmer; Doubleday, $6.95.

In this collection of over 30 essays on Negro American history, Editor Drimmer notes that all but three of the essays were written after 1945, and most of them appeared in the 1960's. Negro history is not only a "new" offering in most colleges and universities, but its scholarship as revealed in this documentary is also new. So new, in fact, that it might give student agitators pause when they demand immediate inclusion of such courses in the curriculum as a price for good behavior. It just might be that neither the specialists nor the material for the "new" subjects is immediately available. But in any event, Drimmer's collection is quite useful and relevant, and will hasten the day when the new courses will be offered.

The current fresh approach to Negro history is well illustrated in three essays. Anthony Lewis's article on "The School Segregation Cases" indicates that Southerners, who were so upset over the use of sociological findings in the 1954 Brown vs. Topeka Board of Education case, should remember that the Plessy vs. Ferguson "separate but equal" decision in 1896 was also cast in a sociological mold reflecting that time period. To Lewis there is nothing wrong with the Supreme Court's interpretations in either time period because they were ... in light of the best contemporary understanding of human behavior."

August Meier's article "On the Role of Martin Luther King" was written before the Negro leader's assassination. His assessment of King's new civil rights strategy is succinctly contained in the following paragraph:

"... a Montgomery-type direct confrontation in the streets."

To Maier, the above characteristics are not necessarily shortcomings, for in truth, King could be discribed as a "Conservative Militant". The secret of King's enormous success was a "combination of militancy with conservatism and caution, of righteousness with respectability. . ." Or retranslated, King's Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) represented a balance between, on the one hand, the Urban League (concerned with conciliation of the white businessman) and the NAACP (concerned with appeals to the courts) and on the other hand, with SNCC's uncompromising militancy (as seen in its sit-ins) and CORE (as seen in its famous Freedom Rides).

Thus it was not surprising that The New York Times and The Washington Post, both sympathetic to civil rights and racial equality, were constantly assuring their leaders that there existed responsible leadership in King. But as Maier points out, King had more prestige than power. While his actual power was overestimated, the symbolic nature of his role as leader of the civil rights movement was underestimated. Recent events in Washington D. C.'s poor peoples protest would prove Maier's points.

I. F. Stone's "The Pilgrimage of Malcolm X" assesses Malcolm X as a leader about to change at the time of his assassination. Malcolm X counselled violence as the answer to white violence.

"If they make the Klan nonviolent, I'll be non-violent" was Malcolm X's terse challenge. Stone also credits Malcolm X with the idea that while the Negro is a minority in this country, he is part of a majority in terms of common action with the rest of the world's colored peoples:

"The first thing the American power structure doesn't want any Negroes to start, is thinking internationally" was an and Southern Negro Slavery;" Arthur Schlesinger Jr., "The Causes of the Civil War;" and C. Vann Woodward, "The Political Legacy of Reconstruction," there are ample entries by well known historians from well known institutions. John Hope Franklin, the Negro historian, is represented by his essay on "The South's New Leaders." The editor takes the American historical profession to task for its prior treatment of American Negro history and notes that the two most influential American historians of the twentieth century, Frederick Jackson Turner and Charles Beard, were indifferent to the subject of the Negro. When they needed information on this score they relied primarily on the biased accounts of U. B. Phillips, John W. Burgess, and William D. Dunning.

If there is a leading subject in this collection it is to be found in the person of W. E. B. DuBois, the famed Negro historian who received a doctorate in history from Harvard University in 1897 and in 1961, at the age of 93, applied for membership in the American Communist Party. DuBois protested not only Booker T. Washington's "sale" of vocational education for Negroes, but the "posture of submissiveness and modest aspiration" that Washington preached.

But more importantly, to the editor of "Black History," DuBois saw that the Negro renaissance could only begin when the Negro himself created a new self image based on his unique heritage and historical experience, thus "coming to terms with this doubleself, with Africa and America."

The book is dedicated to the editor's students at Spelman and the colleges of the Atlanta University Center "who taught me the meaning of what it was to be a Negro in white America."

Dr. W. T. Doherty

August Maier's article "On the Role of Martin Luther King" was written before the Negro leader's assassination. His assessment of King's new civil rights strategy is succinctly contained in the following paragraph:

"In a movement in which respect is accorded in direct proportion to the number of times one has been arrested, King appears to keep the number of times he goes to jail to a minimum. In a movement in which successful leaders are those who share in the hardships of their followers, in the risks they take, in the beatings they receive, in the length of time they spend in jail, King tends to leave prison for other important engagements, rather than remaining there and suffering with his followers. In a movement in which leadership ordinarily devolves upon persons who mix democratically with their followers, King remains isolated and aloof. In a movement which prides itself on militancy and 'no compromise' with racial discrimination or with the white 'power structure,' King maintains close relationships with, and appears to be influenced by, Democratic presidents and their emissaries, seems amenable to compromises considered by some half a loaf or less, and often appears willing to postpone or avoid a actual power was overestimated, the symbolic nature of his role as leader of the civil rights movement was underestimated. Recent events in Washington D. C.'s poor peoples protest would prove Maier's points.

... Malcolm's "The Pilgrimage of Malcolm X" assesses Malcolm X as a leader about to change at the time of his assassination. Malcolm X counselled violence as the answer to white violence.

"If they make the Klan nonviolent, I'll be non-violent" was Malcolm X's terse challenge. Stone also credits Malcolm X with the idea that while the Negro is a minority in this country, he is part of a majority in terms of common action with the rest of the world's colored peoples:

With Philip D. Curtin discussing "African History," Kenneth Stamp, "The Historian ... applied for membership in the American Communist Party. DuBois protested not only Booker T. "MELINDA," by Gaia Servadio, Farrar, Straus and Giroux, $6.95

"Melinda" is a dull book. But there is no reason why it should have been. It could just as easily have been a dull movie. And it may some day soon be just that. For this highly derivative novel echoes the ethos of contemporary comic-spy-sex thrillers, with their desirable and insatiable heroes and heroines, engaged in elaborate plots commissioned by mindless government agencies.

The book strains hard in its attempts to amuse and titillate. By the end of the first chapter, Melinda has seduced her father, brother and psychiatrist; and by the end of the last chapter, she has added members of parliament, lords and beachcombers to her list of conquests.

Like Candy, the heroine of another modern picaresque novel, Melinda crosses oceans and mountains in her search for adventure; but unlike Candy, Melinda derives little pleasure from her escapades. And the reader derives even less.

In "Candy" perversity was comically exploited in the interests of parody. In "Melinda", the author is usually too busy exploiting the genres being imitated to reflect upon them. Melinda's life is chaotic and pointless. There is movement without direction and activity without action. And unlike Terry Southern, Gaia Servadio is unable to convey the sense

Obituary of a Wise Old Buck

Old Crooked Foot of Crooked Fork, born sometime before 1959, died peaceably December 5, 1968, between the two old grades near the Rock Low place in Crooked Fork of Elk by one 30-30 bullet fired by Jackie Gibson.

Practically all local hunters of Elk, Edray, Woodrow and Williams River have known and hunted him, since the late fifties. His right front leg always made a peculiar track in the snow, so we named him Old Crooked Foot and every year since 1959, we always gave him chase and sometimes we could get sight of him, sometimes getting a shot at him, although he always managed to survive. Many a mile we have tracked him and each and every time he would always outsmart us and we would have to come home tired and hungry hoping for another day or another season to get the pleasure of seeing him or having the thrill of getting him for our trophy, and our hunting tales, as we grow older.

Thursday was a cold and windy day, with about four inches of snow on Crooked Fork and all four of us hunters were about frozen and almost ready

Thursday was a cold and windy day, with about four inches of snow on Crooked Fork and all four of us hunters were about frozen and almost ready to give up the hunt when Crooked Foot walked out on our last drive of the day and made his last and fatal mistake by letting young Jackie Gibson take aim and putting him down to rest with a bullet directly through his heart.

We found that old Crooked Foot did not really have a crooked foot but he only had 3 feet and his right front leg had been shot off years ago between the ankle and knee and had grown over to be a fine peg leg. He had 18 points to his horns and was in good shape although not too awfully fat and I would guess before he was hog dressed he would go about 225 pounds.

Now that he is gone, us Crooked Fork hunters will miss our favorite old timer.

Practically all local hunters of Elk, Edray, Woodrow and Williams River have known and hunted him, since the late fifties. His right front leg always made a peculiar track in the snow, so we named him Old Crooked Foot and every year since 1959, we always gave him chase and sometimes we could get sight of him, sometimes getting a shot at him, although he always managed to survive. Many a mile we have tracked him and each and every time he would always outsmart us and we would have to come home tired and hungry hoping for another day or another season to get the pleasure of seeing him or having the thrill of getting him for our trophy, and our hunting tales, as we grow older.

After disconnecting it and moving it on the porch, the picture tube continued popping and breaking other tubes for five minutes. They found where a bullet from a deer hunter's gun had gone through the side of the house and into the TV set. Tannery Workers

The national bi-monthly publication, Tempo, of the FLM Joint Board, for December has a full page featuring a story on Durbin and Marlinton Tannery workers.

Marlinton and Durbin Tanneries have voted to change union representation from District 50, United Mine Workers, to Fur and Leather and Machine Workers of America. A hearing was held in the Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board in November asking for the change and the decision is expected at any time.

Durbin Local 13064, representing about 200 workers, and Marlinton Local 12961 with 120 members, made the request at meetings this summer and fall after becoming dissatisfied with District 50.

Representing the locals at the hearings in Pittsburgh were Durbin union president Ralph Stone, Charles Cover and James Finley and Marlinton president Norman McClure, Leonard Combs, Mason Vaughan, Marvin Doss, Grant Sharp and Ray Warren.

Those attending the funeral of Sgt. John R. Williams from out of town were:

Hospital Rates Increase

The Board of Trustees the Pocahontas Memorial Ho pital, in their meeting on D cember 6, 1968, again studi the serious problem of contin ed increasing costs of hospi operations, including a gene pay increase effective Febru 1st, 1969, by Federal L which will add better t $60.00 per day to the cost operating this hospital.

Most increasing costs s as this are beyond the Boa control.

Very reluctantly, the Bo realized they have no ch but to increase room ra effective January 1, 1969.

Most hospitals have fo it necessary to increase t rates at least twice annu So far, this hospital has able to keep increase cha on a once yearly basis.

DAY OF THE BIG RAFTS

By DR. ROY B. CLARKSON

Typical big log raft, ready to float to the mill. Circa 1890.

TRANSPORTATION of logs to the mill and of lumber away from the mill presented little difficulty for small early operations. Timber grew nearby and the lumber was utilized in the local community. Logs were merely "snaked" or skidded to mills by horses, mules, or oxen. However, as operations grew larger and as more and more timber was cut, it became necessary to devise better means of getting logs to the mill.

Early attempts included hauling on wagons or on two-wheeled vehicles on which the front end of the log rested as the other end trailed on the ground. These methods required comparatively good roads and could not be used in most parts of the state.

Improvements for transporting logs was effected by building tramroads, constructed of thick hardwood planks laid across heavy stringers. This floor provided footing for the horses. Later, wooden rails were added and logs were loaded on trucks with iron wheels, flanged like railroad car wheels. To reduce the extreme friction of wooden rails, in time a thin strip of iron was added to the top of the rail.

Log tramways pushed exploring fingers up the hollows in many sections of West Virginia and were the direct ancestors of the system of railroads that replaced them.

Another method of getting logs to the mill was by "log slides," troughs consisting of two strings of logs, resting on heavy, round ties. These were used on grades ranging between 5 and 25 per cent, down hill. To reduce friction during the summer season, slow stretches of a slide were watered, or greased with a cheap form of skid grease or crude petroleum.

Grace Underwood
s. Carolyn Baxter
Bobbie VanReenen

During the cold season such stretches were iced by throwing water on them at night.

Logs were sometimes brought completely to the mill by means of slides, but more often they were taken to landings on stream banks or along the railroad for transportation to the mill by floating or by rail.

As the lumber industry grew it became necessary to transport logs greater distances in order to get them to the mill. Owners had the choice of moving their mills upstream to the standing timber or of moving timber downstream to the mill. The latter course of action generally was chosen. Many streams in the state were suitable for rafting logs and many other smaller streams could handle logs floated separately.

An average log raft could carry about 70 logs and some 25,000 feet of lumber. Smaller rafts, 35 to 40-log capacity, were used on smaller streams. These were rebuilt into larger rafts when a larger stream was reached. Oars from 20 to 50 feet long were placed at the ends of the rafts to permit steering and to keep the rafts in the channel.

Rafts could not be used successfully on the smaller and rougher streams of the state. Huge drives of separate logs, however, were taken down many of these streams. Best known of the log-driving streams was the Greenbrier River, made famous by W. E. Blackhurst's "Riders of the Flood."

Most of the drives down the Greenbrier consisted of white pine; until after dark, much of the time soaked by icy water. Nevertheless, the drive continued until logs were caught near the mill by large booms that extended across the river.

Log Jams Dangerous

A highly dangerous occurrence during the drive was the formation of jams, in which the entire mass of logs would become stuck behind logs jammed under a rock ledge or other projecting object. It was then necessary for four or five of the most skilled rivermen to go out on the face of the jam to pick loose the key logs and reduce pressure. When this was done the jam would break suddenly, making it necessary to scramble for safety over the churning mass of logs.

In time, laws were passed to protect companies operating in West Virginia. Companies were permitted to build booms on all unnavigable streams except on the Cheat in Monongalia County and on the Elk in Kanawha County, and land could be condemned for the purpose of building booms. Log brands were registered in counties where operations were underway.

however, in 1894 a big hardwood drive was made. It required 12 days to drive these logs from the vicinity of what is now Watoga State Park, Pocahontas County, to Ronceverte, Greenbrier County, a distance of some 55 miles.

In 1884 the St. Lawrence Boom and Manufacturing Company cut 15 million feet of white pine and 1 million feet of hemlock on Deer and Sitlington creeks; 13 million feet of which was taken down the Greenbrier in one drive.

One interesting preparation for the drive was construction of "arks" to be used by the men during the trip downstream. The arks were made of logs with pieces across them holding them together. A typical ark was 70-100 feet long and 18 feet wide. They had a house reaching almost the full length, measuring 16 feet in width.

One ark had a bunkhouse with double-decked bunks set endwise toward a middle aisle four feet wide. A huge "Burnside" stove kept it warm. One such ark could hold up to 100 men. In addition there was another ark that held the cook shack and dining room, and others that carried horses. They were steered by large rudders attached to the stern.

During the drive the men ate breakfast long before daylight, lunch at 9, another lunch at 3, and supper long after dark. The best of food was served hot right off the stove.

Start of the drive was heralded by break-up of river ice in early spring. The work was dangerous and extremely disagreeable, with men working from early morning

SP4 Joseph W. Smith

Specialist Fourth Class Joseph W. Smith, RA 11 721 385, Headquarters and Service Company, TUSLOG Detachment Four, APO New York 09133, is awarded the TUSLOG Detachment Four Certificate of Achievement for outstanding performance of duty during the period 17 October 1967 through 14 October 1968. SP4 Smith's diligent application of sound financial principles and many hours of overtime resulted in the efficient operation of the cashiers section of the disbursing office. SP4 Smith personally re-wrote the Standard Operating Procedure for the cashiers portion of the Disbursing activity. Many hours above normal duty hours were put in, of his own accord, in order to improve the operation of his section and to peform a better service to the troops of the command. SP4 Smith's superior performance of duty is a credit to himself, the United States Army Security Agency, and the United States Army.

Pearl Buck House

The annual meeting of the members of the Pearl S. Buck Birthplace Foundation will be held this Sunday afternoon, November 3, at 1:30 p. m. at the Oak Terrace, Lewisburg. A luncheon will be served at 12:30.

Any person interested in the development of the Home can be a voting member in the Foundation by paying $5 yearly dues. These may be paid at the Lewisburg meeting or mailed to Pearl Buck Foundation, 110 Brook Avenue, Beckley.

Everyone has been impatient during the long wait for work to start on the restoration of the Pearl Buck Birthplace. No work can be started until it is paid for but it looks as if that might be accomplished before too long.

The project is directly controlled by the Foundation. The West Virginia Federation of Women's Clubs has for its project the raising of money to pay for it and it was an inspiring sight at The Greenbrier last spring for us from Pocahontas to see women from all over the State report their money, from a few dollars up to over twelve hundred from the Weirton Club. Over $19,900 was raised last year.

You will hear the architect's report and plans for the coming year. We hope many from Pocahontas will be interested and attend.

Article Published

Coach Elmer Friel, of Marlinton High School, had an article, entitled "High School Single-Wing Synopsis" in the August issue of The Coaching Clinic, a national magazine for coaches. The article contained ideas, drills and techniques on the single-wing formation used so successfully by Coach Friel in his eight years at Marlinton. His teams had completed a record of 58 wins, 18 losses, and three ties, three undefeated seasons (1962, 1964, 1967), two Conference champions and a State championship last year. The article shows the basis for the success of the teams, good physical conditioning, thorough grounding in fundamentals with versatility in strategy, based on good, all-round players. The single-wing formation has the advantage that not many teams are familiar with it today.

Dear Editor:

I just finished writing to my mother, Mrs. Hattie Rhodes, of White Sulphur Springs, and a few friends up there in my old home town. I read in The Pocahontas Times about all the fires in Marlinton. I get the Times two or three weeks late from home: I enjoy reading it very much.

I hope to be back to the good old States in November or December, so I can go deer hunting. It sure is a long ways from home to over here; we have a few more ports to make before we leave as we are here in Lisbon, Portugal, and then on over to Casablanca, and Turkey. I would like to hear from all my friends back there in Marlinton. Well, guess I had better sign off for now and hope to see you all this fall.

INTERSTATE AND APPALACHIAN HIGHWAY SYSTEM
WEST VIRGINIA
THE STATE ROAD COMMISSION OF WEST VIRGINIA
1968

This is a map showing the Interstate and Appalachian Highway System. The Interstate system of roads, shown in solid black lines, was scheduled for completion in 1972 but will probably take a little longer because of cut-backs in Federal appropriations of money.

The Interstate System is a national system of connecting roads from coast to coast. The Appalachian Route, noted with the broken lines is planned for the Appalachian States, from Pennsylvania to Georgia, to open up these areas for economic development. Work on these roads is just getting started and West Virginians will vote November 5 for approval of bonds to be sold to raise our share to match $260,000,000, Federal money for these Appalachian highways in our State You can see from the map how important it is to build our part of the roads, rather than let them come to West Virginia's borders and stop.

of Commerce also reports that retail sales in Pocahontas fell from $8,300,000 to $8,051,000 last year, below 1966 and 1965 but still above 1964. We are spending more of our money shopping outside the County.

The beautiful big Monarch butterfly, sometimes called the milkweed butterfly, is one who migrates south in the winter, like birds do. Last week we had reports from Howard Shinaberry, at the Burruss Mill and Julia Price and Mabel Gay, at Edray, of seeing large swarms of the butterflies on their way south. They came in waves, 30 or 40 to a hundred or more in each group, every little bit all day long for three days (butterflies do not get around at night like their nocturnal friends, the moths). They were 100 to 150 feet above the ground. This was on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Schools

George Baine, Morgantown of the U. S. Geological Survey, was all over the new school site on Tuesday; he was sent by Dr. Paul Price, State Geologist, upon the request of the Board of Education, to make a survey of the water situation. He says water is available from several sources but the board will await his report before deciding on the most economical plan.

Two wells were drilled, one 560 feet yielded only 1 1-2 gallons a minute and one 360 feet had a flow of a gallon. The old CCC well was pumped out and yields 8 to 10 gallons a minute; it is 55 feet deep. The flow necessary will depend partly on the capacity. The C & O has offered a 50,000 or a 100 000 gallon tank, if either can be moved. Fred C. Burns and Arch Wooddell are going to look at them.

The Buckskin Boy Scout Council plans to put in a purification system and has offered to let the Board join with them

Maynard Dilley and Mr. Cassell left Tuesday night to join the attorney and go to New York to sign the bonds.

"For pete's sakes, how much does a guy have to go through to take his girl to a dance?"

This is the big question to be answered November 15, 1968 at Hillsboro Auditorium, Hillsboro, when the Junior Class presents, "Seventeen is Terrific." The three-act comedy will begin at 8:00 p. m. and promises to keep everyone on the side of a young couple's dilemma in getting to the annual dance.

Dr. Allenby, portrayed by Donald McNeel, is no help as he has business and personal problems of his own including the "worst pair of feet in the world." Grandma, characterized by Linda Hill, is restrained by Dr. Allenby and his constant needs. Hanna, the hired girl from the country, played by Jan Bevins, is in a constant stupor over men.

What comes to poor ole' Chuck, the guy who really needs five bucks? Charles Moore plays this poor boy who just can't hold onto money. Barbie Allenby, acted by Jane Callison, is no help to her broth er because of her wistful dreams of the "20 year old adult," Hugo Jarvis, portrayed by Jim Hefner.

Janie Allenby, in real life Lana Gilkerson, keeps the entire family in an uproar with her cheerleading yells during family cri es. Billy Allenby, or really Billy Kershner, who is probably the noisiest neighborhood pest in the world, is aided and abetted in sleuthy procedures by Patsy Gardner, (Sylvia Pritt), his 13 year old counterpart.

Explanation

The high schools of the state are divided into three classifications according to the enrollment of boys in the grades 10, 11, and 12.

The points are then added and divided by the number of games played. This gives the high school its rated standing.

By this rating, up to the Valley High game, we had 80 points. This, divided by the games we had played, 8, gave us a rating of 10. When Valley High forfeited to us we received the same number of points we would have gotten if we would have won the game. We got 6 points from them and, since they had only won two games, we got a total of 8 points This added to our 80 gave us a total of 88 points. This divided by 9, which was the number of games we played, counting Valley High, gave us 9.77. Since we and all of our opponents had finished our season, we could not pick up any more points.

Paden City had finished their season with 97 points. This, divided by ten, the number of games they had played gave them 9.7 rating points. This put us ahead of them at the close of our season. Paden City, how-season with 97 points. This, divided by ten, the number of games they had played gave them 9.7 rating points. This put us ahead of them at the close of our season. Paden City, however, had defeated teams to play last Friday. One of these won and one of them tied. This gave Paden City one and one half points to be added to their 97 points, or 98.5 points This, divided by the number of the games they had played, 10, gave them a final rating point of 98.5 and put them into the playoff.

The big problem with us was that our opponents, who usually win quite a few games, had a very poor season and did not help us in points. The Greenbrier Valley Conference closing hurt us as it [illegible] Conference. This gave us a lot of points last year.

We had no choice in picking our opponents as we tried to schedule ten games and no one wanted to play us after last year.

I hope this will make the point system a little clearer to you.

Dear Editor:

I am just a plain hillbilly—been here a long time and I have never seen anything messed up like it is right now everything and everybody. So many want to blame things on the young people. Why? They are not to blame at all. All you hear is politics, each man thinks he is the best one to straighten things out; believe me, there is a lot of things which need to be straightened out. One can't do it alone. Take our roads—Are they more important than our schools? Some people seem to think that they are. You don't hear half as much about schools Maybe it is just Pocahontas that needs new schools, I don't know. Take the new roads; people get on them and want to see how fast they can get some place; some make it, some don't, and believe me, it is not just the young people. It surely would be nice to hear more about schools in Pocahontas and less about roads; it would do our children more good People have been leaving West Virginia to get jobs. Too bad they have to leave on account of schools.

Bear

Richwood News Leader Editor Bronson McClung tells of Ed Buck's encounter with a bear in Pocahontas while he was bow hunting recently. Mr. Buck, a well known naturalist, is the father of our 4-H Agent, Ellsworth Buck.

Mayor Ed Buck has his problems. Broken sewers, broken street pavement, barking dogs. . . it is almost enough to drive the man back to school teaching. And to make it even more distressing, there is no escape from the problems.

Like last week when he slipped off to do a little bow hunting he had a run in with a mother and her three children.

Even though Ed has been mayor for only a few weeks he has learned that is is almost impossible to win an argument with a woman and that the best thing even a mayor can do is to keep his mouth shut and listen.

This is about what Ed did last week when he ran into a she bear and three children up near Barlow Top in the national forest.

This is how Ed tells the story. The time was about 4:45 p.m. on Thursday; he was out for some bow hunting hoping to kill a deer. In addition to his bow and supply of arrows he carried a hunting knife. Guns are not permissible when bow hunting. He was on a "stand" near Barlow Top, about one and one-half miles from the end of the new Highland Scenic Highway. His perch was upon a tree trunk which made his stand "about head high." It was quiet. With his foot or some other part of his body, Ed cracked a stick and the noise immediately brought a 200-pound mother bear charging at him.

In addition to the mother there were two yearlings which he estimated to weigh about 72 pounds each and a cub which would probably tip the scales at 25 pounds. When he first saw the family, mother and children were about 40 yards away and Ed believes he saw the bears before they saw him. The noise gave him away and brought the charge by the mother who came to within about 8 or 10 feet of him and stopped. He thinks the reason she stopped was that she was disturbed because of his advantage in height.

Ed was posed in battle position with his chief defensive weapon. An arrow was placed on the bow string; he did not draw, waiting for her to come closer.

It was evident the mother was excited, mad, bothered and frightened. After she halted her charge, Ed says she stood and stared at him for what seemed to him like five minutes or more. Then she backed off a bit but charged right back to her staring position. All the time she was growling and grunting and bellowing.

Meanwhile the yearlings had taken safety in nearby trees. Ed doesn't know where the cub went but as the mother bear began her second retreat, she saw the cub scamping around on the ground and she let out a very stem growl which Ed says was a reprimand to the cub for not taking to a tree and safe cover during the encounter.

Mr. Buck says the two yearlings were born during the spring of 1967 and the cub was born this past spring. The mother bear will run the yearlings off about next spring. He says this is the second family of bears he has run upon during his lifetime. The other time he was not charged upon, however.

Ed Buck has been hunting for more than half a century. He has killed just about every game animal known on the North American con-

Plane Crash

A light plane, a single engine Cessna 150, crashed on Tea Creek Monday morning. The plane was completely destroyed but the pilot, J. F. Johnston, 23. Parkersburg, walked away from the wreck. He walked three to five miles and was pick ed up by hunters and brought to the hospital here. He was treated for cuts to his face and eye and released Tuesday morn ing.

Johnston, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Johnston, of Parkersburg, was flying from Atlantic City, New Jersey, to Huntington, where he had rented the plane. He was running low on fuel and was trying to make Elkins airport. He started losing altitude and figures he blacked out, regaining consciousness after the crash.

The plane crashed high on the mountain in rugged country, accessible only by walking. Corporal C. C. Beck and Joe Roy walked to the scene to investigate.

Bear Tales

By way of Baltimore, we have some bear tales from Odey Cassell. Earl Shelsby, of the staff of the Sun Sports, was in Cass for the first part of the bear season and writes:

It took me a lot of searching, but I think I have found the world's champion tough-luck bear hunter. He is Odey Cassell, 82-year old native of Cass. Nearly everyone who has hunted bear seriously has a sad tale or two to tell but Odey has a dozen.

On the eve of West Virginia bear season, Cassell was using his stories of how bears have avoided his rifle during sixteen years in hunting in prime bear country. When the evening ended, there was no indication that he had completed his long list of sad bear stories.

Some of his misadventures with bears made "The Shelby Jinx" sound like a happy ending. The first of several Cassell tales is about the bear that he did get. He doesn't count this one because he didn't get him with a gun.

"I was 17 at the time," the former logger, pullmiller, and farmer began. "These friends of mine have a trap line right up above my farm.

I heard them hollering and whooping one day and I knew what they had. I answered them and they told me to come up to them.

a big bear in a trap but they didn't have any guns with them.

I was about 240 pounds then and didn't know my own strength. They gave me a club and told me to hit the bear on the head.

One Paw Free

The bear had its left front paw in the trap, but what I failed to realize was that the other one was free.

I took a swing at the bear with all my strength and just as I did the bear threw up its other paw and the club flew back striking me right on the forehead and knocking me back 12 feet.

It gave me a nose bleed and a wonderful hurt.

We finally killed the bear but the only way we could do it was to line up the other two fellows so we could all swing clubs at the same time.

I don't know whether it was my lick or someone else's, but we got him right across the back of the neck and paralyzed him.

We didn't have any scale, but he must have weighed 450 pounds.

Cassell is proud of his accomplishment and enjoys telling the story, but you can tell he regrets never having killed one with a firearm. "I have had two bears closer than you," he says, indicating a distance of under six feet. I never got a shot at either one.

Bear hunting is a tradition in this section of West Virginia. It grew out of a necessity of protecting sheep and other livestock from bears. There is a bounty on bear in Pocahontas County today.

Coon

William Akers killed a coon Friday which would probably break some records in the heavy weight class. It tipped the scales at twenty-one and a half pounds and was shot on the Luster Shrader farm above Huntersville. Raymond Bowers and then Akers himself were telling about the coon and up cropped an old coon story told for many years on Lum Riddle so it ought to be good for such a big coon as this. A good coon dog properly trained can save a man a lot of work and Lum had a jewel of a dog, which gave him a little more time in the rocking chair. He had that dog trained so all he had to do was put the pelt board out on the porch and the dog would size it up, take off, and come back with a coon whose skin would make a perfect fit for the board. One day he was busy outside and he heard that dog give a sort of bewildered yelp and then saw him take off to the woods. That dog hasn't come back yet—he is still trying to find a coon big enough for the out sized ironing board Lum's wife left on the porch after she finished her work!

So when William Akers came home and saw the ironing board on the porch he knew why he had to wait three hours for his coon dog to find that big coon.

INDIAN FIGHTER

The following is a copy of an affidavit on file in Washington, D. C., concerning the service as an Indian fighter of Richard Hill, one of the early settlers of Pocahontas County. This is from a photocopy obtained by his great-great-grandson, Johnnie B. Hill, of Hillsboro, which, of course, was named for the Hills.

State of Virginia) ss
Pocahontas County) On this 18th day of February, 1834, personally appeared before me Thomas Hill a Justice of the Peace in and for said County Richard Hill a resident of said County and State aforesaid aged 70 years, who being first duly sworn according to law doth on his oath make the following declaration in order to obtain the benefit of the provisions made by the Act of Congress passed the 7th of June 1832

That on the 8th day of April 1781 in the County of Augusta in the State of Virginia he volunteered to serve against the Indians in Captain George Clendenen's Company and was stationed in the garrison situated on Swago Creek, a branch of Greenbrier river, then in the County of Augusta Virginia now in Pocahontas - that he served in this station six months.

That the nature of his services was to guard the garrison to range and spy after the Indians to which the low places in the gaps of the mountains between that place and the head of Elk river

He some times went in company with Jacob Kennison, Henry Casebolt, Thos Drinings William Owin and Charles Buck

That during this time of service he recollects of being in company with Nathaniel Robins when they heard the report of two guns not a far distant - supposing it was Indians himself and his companion went on to the place where they heard the report and when they arrive at the house of Thomas Drining and learned that the Indians had been there and made prisoners and conveyed away the wife and two children of Drinings the wife and one child of George Smith - and Drinings and Smith shot at but made their excape.

He and his companion carried the intelligence to the garrison and himself in company with Jacob Kennison, Nathaniel Kennison, William Owin and others to the number of 17 men left the garrison in pursuit of the Indians with a hope to reseque the prisoners - but after an unsuccessful travel through the wilderness for several days was compelled to abandon the pursuit and return to the garrison.

That again on the 15th of April 1782 he volunteered to serve under Capt Clendenen and was stationed in a garrison on Greenbrier River in the county of Augusta situated three or four miles from the garrison that he had served in the year previous where Robert Gay Esqr. now lives.

That the nature of his service this year 1782 was the same as the year previous That while stationed in the last named garrison a party of about twenty Indians had concealed themselves near the station in order to ascertain its strength or to take the men by surprise when they might chance to leave the garrison - where they had remained for several days as it afterwards appeared - that he in company with Henry Baker early one morning left the garrison for the purpose of going to the river to wash which was close by - and an Indian had concealed himself behind a stump in the fence corner near where they had to pass over - that the Indian suffered him to pass by as he was several years in front of Baker - that just as Baker arrive to the fence - the Indian fired on him and the ball passed through his breast - at which moment the Indian sprung from his concealment and raised the warhoop and that he the applicant had to run meeting of the Indian to make his way into the station and that when he regained the place of passing over the fence where Baker had fell the Indian with an uplifted Tomahock was within a few feet of him - but he made his way into the garrison with safety - the Indian immediately concealed himself under the river bank and from his report about twenty Indians appeared in various directions - that Baker who fell lay to near the garrison for them to venture to skalp and to protect themselves from a shot from the garrison - they remained under cover of the Bank and tyed a cord to a pole and drew him under the bank and skalped him - made no serious attack on the garrison looked about some time - shot a cow in the field near the garrison and took some of her meat - took some horses and disapeared they dispached a messenger to bring a reinforcement in in case they would renew their attack and late in the evening Captain Clendenen arrive with sixteen or seventeen men.

That the next day he in company with William Ewing went to apprise the settlers higher up the Greenbrier river of their danger - that Capt Clendenen on the return with his men Two of them John and James Bridger left the company to pass a nearer route was fired on by the Indians and both fell - in perilous scenes like these he served in this last named year for six months

That he volunteered and served from the 15th of April until the middle of October in the year of 1781 under the above named Captain - and was stationed this year in a garrison situated on Stamping Creek a branch of Greenbrier river in the little Levels then in the County of Augusta now Pocahontas County Virginia where John McNeal now lives

The second section of the Scenic Highway was completed except for eleven posts when weather forced the crews to stop work last week. They were to be installed any day the weather permits. Frank Hill says the temperature was 10 to 15 degrees with the wind blowing 50 to 60 miles an hour last Thursday there.

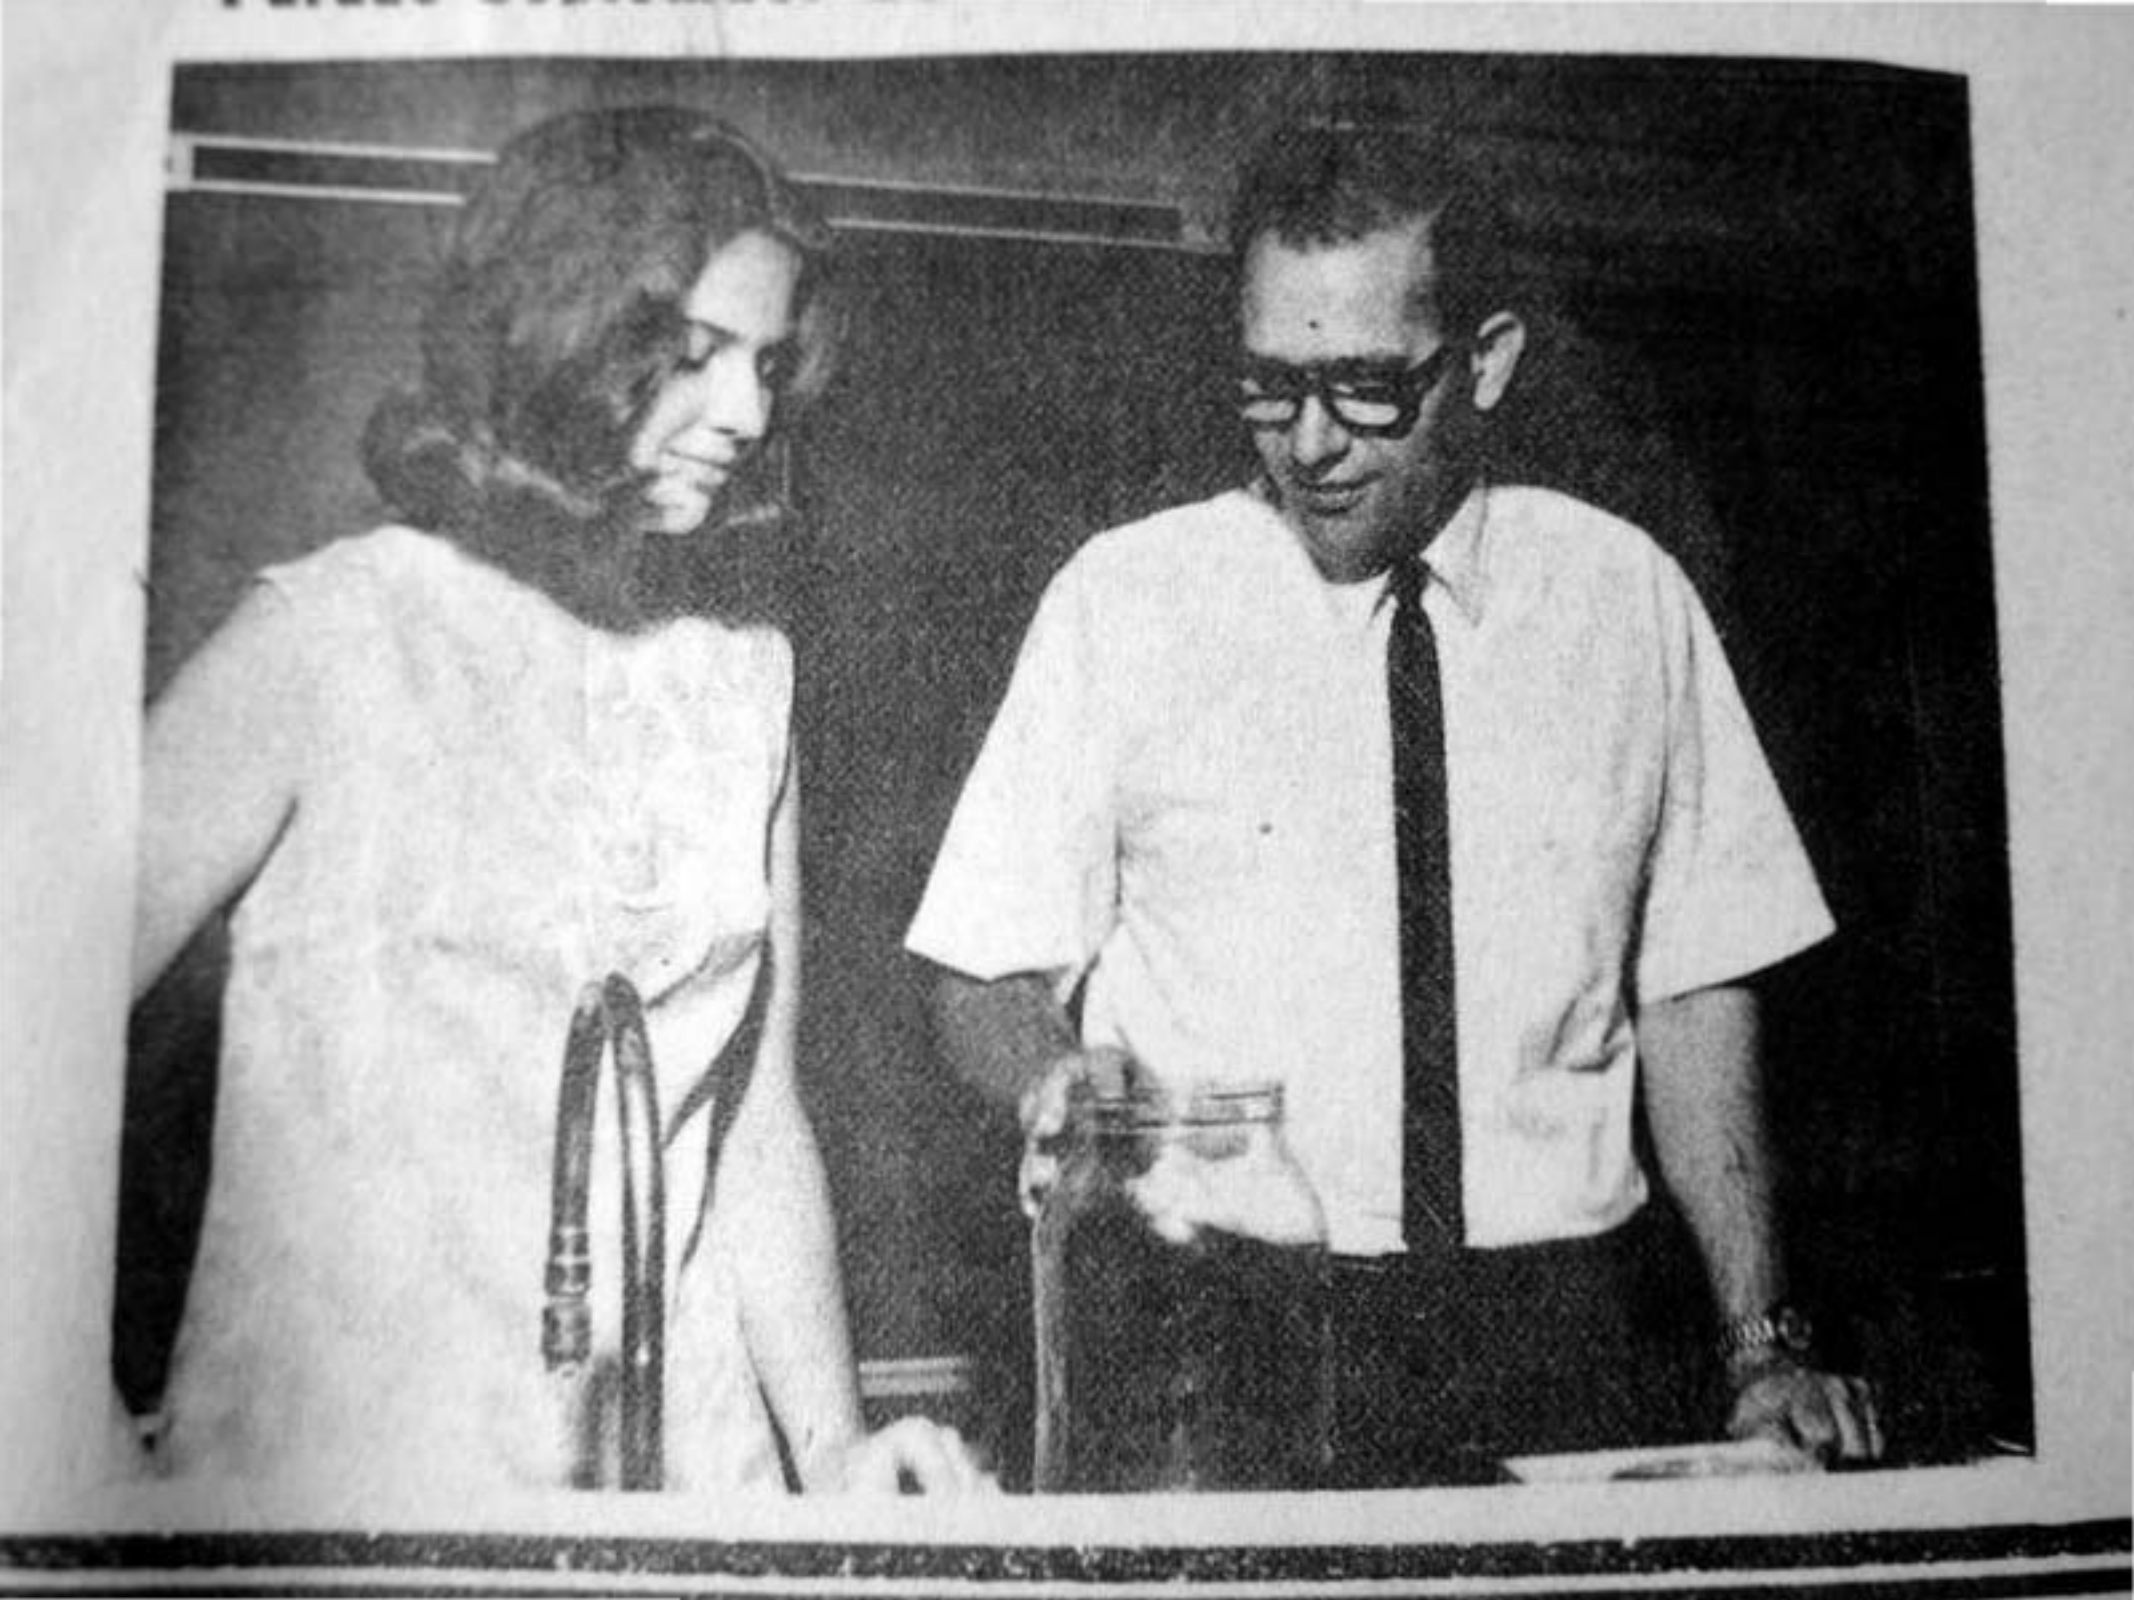
This year's 23 participants spend rewarding afternoons [illegible] faculty supervised research in Medical Center, Agricultural Sciences or Main Campus laboratories. Like WVU summer school, the program ended August 20. Wanda is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Wymer, of Route 1, Hillsboro.



PIONEERS COME TO THE FORESTS

By DR. ROY B. CLARKSON

[Another in a series based on "TUMULT ON THE MOUNTAINS" by Dr. Roy B. Clarkson—Prepared by West Virginia office of Public Informa-

THE FIRST WHITE MEN to settle in this area arrived in the Eastern Panhandle in the early part of the 18th century. It was not until 1749, however, that the first settlement west of the Allegheny Mountains, at Marlinton, Pocahontas County, was made.

The first settlers along the rivers must have been overwhelmed when they contemplated the time and effort it would require to remove the gigantic oaks, walnuts, elms, silver maples, and other trees that thickly covered the rich bottomlands.

When a building site was selected in a new area the first task was to clear away the trees in preparation for the new home and for growing crops. Timber was absolutely worthless in this section of the country at that time.

A few selected trees were utilized in constructing the dwelling; chestnut, black walnut and cherry were used in making "worm" or "rail" fences. The beech, ash, sugar maple and other trees were girdled and later burned or cut and rolled into huge piles and burned.

Enlargement of the farm meant a continuation of this toil, year after year. The very best timber in the state was thus destroyed.

The first dwellings of the settlers were rude affairs, built without the use of any instruments for sawing. All parts of the house—the log walls, the clapboard roofs, the puncheon floors (if such a luxury was obtained) and the furniture—were shaped with the axe, the adz, and the frow.

Later settlers brought with them whip saws which made it possible to saw rough planks for floors, doors, roofs and furniture. The whip saw was a rude, hand-operated saw with hooked teeth, from five to seven feet long, with a handle at each end.

Squared With Axe

The timber intended to be sawed was first squared with a broad axe, and then raised on a scaffold six or seven feet high. Two able-bodied men then took hold of the saw, one standing on top of the log, the other under it, and commenced sawing. The labor was excessively fatiguing and about 100 linear feet of plank or scantling was considered a good day's work for two hands.

An alternate method was to roll the squared log over a pit dug for the purpose. The workman who stood on top of the log and guided the saw along a chalk-line was supposedly the better man and was called the pit-man, a name that later was applied to the wooden beam attaching the saw to the crank of the water-powered sawmill.

Despite their shortcomings the whip saws supplied the needs of early settlers and continued in use in some parts of the state until after 1900.

With the increase in population and the growth of towns an increased demand for lumber made the erection of sawmills a necessity.

It is not known when or where the first sawmill was built and operated in West Virginia. It is probable, however, that there were a few built by the early settlers who occupied the valleys of the Potomac River and its tributaries prior to the year 1755.

The first sawmill west of the Allegheny Mountains was built in 1778 near the town of St. George in Tucker County by John Minear. These first mills were run by waterpower and usually were combined with a grist mill. They utilized a device known as the "sash" or "gate" saw, a name derived from the immense wooden sashes or gates to which the saws were fastened.

In some mills the carriage was "walked" back by stepping on wooden pins extending outward from the circumference of a large wheel connected to the carriage by cogs. The strokes were up and down in vertical fashion and in earlier mills were made at a speed of less than 80 strokes a minute.

Water Power Wasted

In the early water sawmill more power was wasted than was delivered to the sash. Nevertheless, the sash sawmill was a great improvement over the whip saw and allowed two men to cut up to 500 linear feet of lumber in one day with much less back-breaking labor.

Improvements continued to b made in water mills, including t rigging of several saws side by sid so that several boards could be c at one time.

One of the largest water mills the state was located on the Gr Kanawha River at Kanawha Fal some two miles below the junct of the New and Gauley rivers.

Here, Maynard A. Cheney's sa mill, powered by water through rock-cut flume from the 22-f high falls, attained 225 horsepow It had a daily capacity of fr 30,000 to 40,000 feet.

Hundreds of mills opera throughout the state during 19th century. As late as 18 seven-eights of the lumber sav in the state was sawed by w power.

While lumbering was begin to take its toll on the forest the state, other practices of settlers were reducing thous of acres of virgin forest lan farms, pastures, or wastelands. of the most destructive prac previous to the Civil War was clearing of large tracts of land a system known as "hacking," the purpose of providing pas for cattle.

You would have to add color to get an effective picture of the Marlinton Post Office, which has won a citation for attractive grounds. Ralph Nottingham and Glen Rucker have worked hard to make the lawn beautiful with shrubs, spring bulbs, asters and other annual flowers; also they have an endless job trying to keep the public from being "litter bugs."

The ground pine's ancestors—tree club mosses—were four to will return to WVU in the fall

The Rev. Donald E. Wood has accepted a call to be pastor of the Marlinton Presbyterian Church and will be in the pulpit October 6. The family will move here about October 1.

Mr. Wood was born at Ashtabula, Ohio, on March 4, 1916. He was educated in the public schools of Ohio and brought up in the Presbyterian Church, but did not come to know Jesus Christ as his personal Savior until the age of thirty-five. At this time he was living in Miami, Florida. He was married and had three children and was the owner and manager of two radio and T. V. sales and servicing shops.

Shortly after his conversion, the Lord called him into the ministry, but he did not respond and for ten years he dragged his feet — knowing what he should do, but unwilling to do it. Finally Christ had His way and he responded.

He went to Columbia Theological Seminary at Decatur, Georgia, and upon completion of three years' work came to Greenbrier Presbytery where for the last three and a half years he served the churches of Centerville, Mount Pleasant, James Memorial and Hans Creek Union Church.

Mrs. Wood is the former June Oswald, of Cleveland, Ohio, and they have four living children: Miss Kathryn Elaine Wood, living with them, Mrs. Carol Neidich, of Miami, Florida, Mrs. Betty Shaw, at Columbia Seminary, Decatur, Georgia, John Steven Wood living with them, and Donald Wood, Jr., at Home with the Lord. They also have two grandchildren.

Exchange Student

Pocahontas County is honored by having a distinguished visitor for the remainder of September, Ernst Binder, Germany. He is staying in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Beard, Hillsboro.

Ernst's home is in Germany and he is visiting our country because of the International Farm Youth Exchange which is conducted by the Cooperative Extension Service and the National 4-H Club Foundation.

Ernst has spent four months in the United States and will spend two more before he returns to Germany. Before coming to Pocahontas County Ernst was in Lewis County and from our county he will travel to Braxton County.

While Ernst is in the county he will be looking forward to meeting people and learning about farming techniques and youth work.

Friday we paid a visit to the American Legion Hall in Marlinton and found it more attractive and cheerful than we remember seeing it before. This will be the home for this year for the first special education classes in Pocahontas County. The civic-minded Legionnaires have let the Board of Education have their building for two years now, first for Home Economics classes after the fire last year and now for this new venture in education for children with some learning difficulties in academic work.

New curtains, freshly painted cabinets, scrubbed floors, pictures, low tables and chairs, potted plants, mirrors, a clean bathroom, modernly equipped kitchen make for pleasant surroundings and basic equipment for this school. Then they have the most modern tools for teaching and learning--tape recorders for music and familiar childhood stories, for vocabulary listening and speaking, transparency projectors, games and toys for coordinating skills, etc.

Tommy McNeill, of Buckeye, paints a cabinet. Tommy, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey McNeill, has been most helpful getting the room ready.

In this pleasant atmosphere for learning, Mrs. Virginia Simmons bubbles over with enthusiasm for this opportunity to teach in this special education field. She has been trained for this work and is getting her

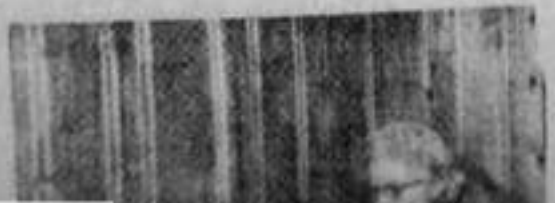
In this pleasant atmosphere for learning, Mrs. Virginia Simmons bubbles over with enthusiasm for this opportunity to teach in this special education field. She has been trained for this work and is getting her Master's degree in this field. Assisting her will be Mrs. Barbara Hannah, of Elk. Mrs. Hannah, who began as a teacher's aide, has resumed work on her degree to become a qualified teacher.

Mrs. Brenda Doss and Mrs. Ina Montgomery lend helping hands.

This is a place where volunteer workers and donations are welcomed. Already, fifty high school students have formed a Helpers' Club and are donating their study periods. Money will be needed to help pay for milk, kitchen supplies, and the like; transportation and helpers for field trips around the community will also be needed, among other things. If your club needs a project, here is an opportunity for service. Mrs. Simmons or Mrs. Hannah are available for talks.



The four areas of development will be self-realization, social acceptance, economic efficiency, and civic responsibility. They will have lessons social acceptance, economic efficiency, and civic responsibility. They will have lessons on safety, cleanliness, cooking, sewing--all kinds of practical things--as well as reading, numbers, and the like. They will visit the beauty shop, the barber shop, the fire department, various offices, and many more places during the year.

Twenty children have been enrolled and there is room for five more. They may come from any place in the County if transportation is provided.

These classes are made possible by money under Title I and Title VI of the National Education Act. The project was developed after testing programs showed enough children needed special training that could not be given in the regular class rooms. Application was submitted through the Board of Education. Fredric Smith is Coordinator of Federal Projects. Mr. Smith announced Friday that a Title VI grant of $26,000 was approved last week to erect a building to house the special education classes. The building will contain two classrooms and an office and will be located in the Marlinton school complex. This was the only construction grant in the State. Also approved was $20,000 under Title I for equipment, teachers, and other expenses.

Marlinton Head Start

Forty children in the three Head Start Child Development Centers of Marlinton completed their summer programs on Friday, August 9.

The teachers, Mrs. Ada Vaughan, Mrs. Orda Smith, and Miss Alice Waugh, and the aides, Miss Brenda Markley, Mrs. Jane Beverage and Miss Phyllis Daugherty, have reported a most successful program. The children enjoyed many experiences and made many new friends.

The teachers and aides appreciated the fine cooperation of the parents of the children. Parent involvement in the program was excellent this summer.

During the program every child had a physical and dental examination. These clinics were directed by Miss Katherine Campion, County Health Nurse, and her staff, with the cooperation of Dr. L. E. Rexrode, Dr. A. Assar and Dr. E. Shaw.

Much of the success of the program is credited to the willing cooperation of the business and professional people of the

Attempted Arson

Another frightening incident was discovered Tuesday morning at Hillsboro High School where somebody had pulled off a screen, left the window raised about six inches, and set fire to some oil-like substance on rags in the band room. Fortunately it burned itself out and did very little damage but it could have been another building lost. The State Police and the State Fire Marshal were investigating Tuesday but no official statement was made. About two years ago a similar attempt was made in the Hillsboro Graded School.

Schools

Unexpectedly Marlinton Graded School was ordered closed by the State Fire Marshal and State Superintendent of Schools last Friday and classes were suspended for a week. Plans as announced have come out of the chaos. The Campbelltown and Huntersville schools were not condemned but just closed until things could be straightened out.

The Board of Education was to meet with the State Superintendent at 8:45 Wednesday morning to discuss and get approval for the planned schedule. Bids for the bonds for the new school, which were given a good BAA rating, were to be opened at 1 p. m.

Schools

The Marlinton Elementary school children, including Huntersville and Campbelltown, will return to school on Monday, September 16.

The Marlinton High School students, grades 7—12, and most of the bus students, grades 1—6, will start to school at 8:00 A. M. and be out by 1:00 P. M.

All of the students, grades 1—6, who live in the Town of Marlinton, will walk to school by 1:00 and be dismissed at 5:00 P. M.

All of the Marlinton Elementary students will be notified by postcard before Monday as to what time they will report to school.

The Fire Marshal has approved the basement of the Marlinton Methodist Church provided two fire doors are added and certain partitions corrected. None of the Marlinton Elementary School can be used for student occupancy. The high school can be used providing certain requirements are met; these things are now being done.

To the Parents of Marlinton Elementary Students:

I realize the proposed schedule will work many hardships on all persons involved and I assure you there are many more complications involved if school is not in session by Monday.

The Board of Education by State Law must have 180 days in session in order to receive State financial aid unless school is closed by natural disaster or bad weather.

We have a dedicated teaching staff at Marlinton Elementary who are willing to bear the responsibility and hardship of educating your children. It is your responsibility to give them your support and encouragement during this critical period.

Forestry Money

The twelve West Virginia counties containing National Forest land have received $216,998 from the U.S. Treasury. This sum represents 25 per cent of the fiscal year 1968 income of the Monongahela National Forest and the portions of the George Washington and Jefferson National Forests which are located in West Virginia. Each year 25 per cent of the income from these Federal lands is paid to the counties in lieu of taxes.

The $216,998.52 is allocated to the counties in proportion to the area of National Forest land in each county:

Grant	$ 3,751.44
Greenbrier	25,708.82
Hampshire	187.80
Hardy	3,432 00
Monroe	434.40
Nicholas	6,048.49
Pendleton	19,160 21
Pocahontas	72,285.74
Preston	1,000.54
Randolph	44 356.50
Tucker	23,988.54
Webster	16,644.04
	$216,998.52

The total area in the three National Forests in West Virginia is 920,117 acres with the great bulk of it in the 814,600 acre Monongahela National Forest which is entirely in West Virginia.

The amount paid to the West Virginia counties is 23.6 cents per acre. This is 10 per cent more than last year and will be spent by counties for roads and schools.

Appeals board upholds DEP decision on Slaty Fork Quarry

Authorization for the expansion of a rock quarry near Slaty Fork in Pocahontas County has been upheld by a state appeals board.

In a 5-1 vote, the Surface Mine Board endorsed a ruling by the West Virginia Division of Environmental Protection. The board's decision was made Friday and released Monday.

The appeal was filed by Snowshoe Mountain Resort, the P. Pendleton Kennedy Chapter of Trout Unlimited and the Mountain/Valley Coalition.

To limit the visual effect of the quarry on tourist traffic, the DEP deleted nearly 4 acres from the previous quarry permit and 17 acres from the new permit sought by the quarry operator.

After negotiations with the regulatory agency, Waco Oil & Gas Co. Inc., of Glenville, agreed to DEP's deletions. It had sought a 38.54 acre expansion. DEP approved 21.44 acres, a reduction of 44 percent in the proposal. Waco also agreed to the reduction in the original permit.

The DEP also imposed limits on the rock crushing operation at the site, which at current rates original permit.

The DEP also imposed limits on the rock crushing operation at the site, which at quarrying operations frequently results in noise complaints, that limit crushing to daylight hours only, with no crushing on Sundays. Another restriction imposed by DEP was a requirement that the first 100 feet of the haulroad leading away from U.S. 219 be paved to reduce dust and tracking of debris. Waco agreed to these restrictions.

The quarry has had a permit since 1975, and existing state law allows for expansions as long as certain requirements are met.

DEP approved the expansion because the mining plan and drainage control plans included in the permit were designed to protect the health and safety of the public and the environment. The existing operation has not received any violations concerning blasting, water quality, noise or pollution and none is anticipated as a result of the expansion.

The board added a requirement that the company install an evergreen buffer to screen the quarry from U.S. 219.

The permit being appealed was ipated as a result of the expansion.

The board added a requirement that the company install an evergreen buffer to screen the quarry from U.S. 219.

The permit being appealed was issued by DEP on December 13, 1999.

Surface Mine Board Chairman Thomas R. Michael dissented, saying the expansion "will cause the destruction of the aesthetic values which are the foundation of the recreation industry in the Snowshoe area, thereby impairing the property rights of others."

Heritage of Greenbrier Military School to be preserved

Over 200 graduates of Greenbrier Military School and GMS supporters recently participated in groundbreaking ceremonies for a construction project that will preserve the heritage of their school. The Greenbrier Forever Project will provide a museum for GMS artifacts and memories and will be the focal point for reunion activities. The project will also provide for the expansion of a conference center within the same building on the campus of the West Virginia School of Osteopathic Medicine (formerly the GMS campus).

Congressman Alan Mollohan an alumnus of GMS, and Congressman Nick Joe Rahall brought greetings to those gathered on October 20 and were thanked for their efforts in securing the federal funding that made the project possible.

Remembering his days at GMS, Congressman Mollohan said: "GMS produced citizens of outstanding character. In 1972, GMS closed its doors. As we gather today, we open the door on a new beginning. This project ensures the great history of GMS will be preserved for posterity and her name will never die."

Congressman Rahall complimented WVSOM President Olen E. Jones, Jr., for his support of GMS activities on campus. He added: "This project presents many opportunities for GMS get-togethers. It also serves the growing needs of Lewisburg and the entire Greenbrier Valley."

WVSOM President Jones congratulated those involved in the success of the Greenbrier Forever Project, noting their unflagging commitment to seeing the project through. Specifically mentioned were Congressmen Mollohan and Rahall, the GMS Alumni Association, its board of directors, and the Greenbrier Forever Committee.

The ceremony was held in conjunction with the GMS annual reunion.

Article on Hermitage Mound at Bartow reprinted

by Maurice Brooks

(Dr. Maurice Brooks was a professor of Wildlife Management at West Virginia University when he wrote "The Hermitage Mound" and gave it to Randolph and Madge Bledsoe while they operated The Hermitage Motel. Dr. Brooks stayed there when in this area studying many facets of nature that are unique to the Applachians, which are among the oldest mountains on earth, reaching back more than 500 million years.

Dr. Brooks was a biologist, forester, ornithologist, and active conservationist. He was a recognized authority on the Appalachians and his book, The Appalachians, published in 1965, is of enduring usefulness. The book's authoritative text and beautiful drawings and photographs reveal the complex patterns of nature in one of America's major geographical regions.

Dr. Brooks also wrote The Life of the Mountains, two scientific books, and many magazine and newspaper articles.)

There it stands, rounded and symmetrical, on a terrace rising from the Greenbrier River's East Fork. It is ancient - mature forest trees rise above it. It is man-made and it represents an incredible effort by people who worked without machinery, wheeled tools, and domestic animals. Earth for the mound was carried by human hands and it must have had a great purpose.

We shall never know the whole story; mound building Indians did not leave written records. Even the most careful excavation could yield only fragments of the human motives and dramas behind it. But we can speculate from things which are known.

All through Middle America, but particularly in the valleys of the Ohio and the Mississippi and their tributaries, American Indians began to develop their own social organizations, to cultivte the land, to dwell in villages, and, in course of time, construct earthern mounds. Hundreds of these remain, most of them in the broader river valleys. Some represent an animal - a serpent or a bird - and are huge in dimension. Others were rounded; these too were sometimes tremendous earthworks such as the famous Grave Creek Mound, near Moundsville, West Virginia. Mounds in this form were used as burial places for the chiefs or other great leaders of the tribe. A few have been carefully excavated by archaeologists; many others have not been studied, although they are under constant threat from vandals and souvenir hunters.

Indians who erected these mounds had given up many of their wandering, hunting habits and had settled down to culivate the land, to grow corn, beans, and squashes, to shape baskets and pottery, to weave cloth, and to form tools and ornaments from copper and its alloys. They were on their way to what the present would call civilization.

But they had neigbors who were more primitive, who resented the settled life of the villages, and who coveted the food, the goods, and the women and children of their more sedentary brethren.

This is an old story and has been repeated many times. People who have goods and foods have

1968 letter shared by Galford

Harvey Galford brought in the following letter he received in 1968 when he was chairman of Pioneer Days:

Dear Mr. Galford,

I read with great interest in The Pocahontas Times of Pioneer Days coming up there next month. Being a granddaughter of Pocahontas County, and being at this point engaged in writing a book about the county's earliest days, I have more than just a passing interest in the events about to transpire.

My great-great-great-great-grandfather, James Ewing, was one of the earliest settlers of Pocahontas County. As I understand it, he had lands there as early as 1750, for his name is mentioned in an old Lewis survey of 1751, and that was back in the day when Knapp's Creek was known as Ewing's Creek (so listed on early maps). His two sons, William Ewing and John Ewing (known in those parts as Swago Bill and Indian John) had lands on Swago and Stony Creeks, respectively, and it was there that they raised (between them) 23 children. William Ewing was with Capt. John Stuart at the Battle of Point Pleasant in 1774 and with Capt. Matthew Arbuckle at the fort in 1777 when Chief Cornstalk was killed.

By 1810, the area, which earlier had teemed with Ewings, was pretty much devoid of them, for in 1802 Indian John and most of his family had moved on to Gallia County, Ohio, and his brother, William, followed suit in 1810. Two sons of John remained in Pocahontas County, however, and I understand there are still descendants living on the very land on Stony Creek where John Ewing resided nearly 200 years ago. William sold his 745 acres on Swago Creek to Sampson Mathew in 1812, whose family, the McClintics, live there still.

My grandfather, A. E. Ewing, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, was very proud of his Pocahontas County roots, and being very much the historian, wrote many articles of an historical nature for the Pocahontas Times during his lifetime. He and the then editor, Calvin W Price, became firm friends through their exchange of letters. It is this valuable information that I am using as the basis for my book on James Ewing and his descendants. Beyond that, however, I have gone into deep study on the county's early years—a subject I've found to be fascinating.

Henry Ford camping trip to West Virginia topic of article

One of the earliest people to take a motorized vacation was Henry Ford. This is not surprising, concerning his connection with the automobile industry. Six times between 1915 and 1924, he took extended vacations by car. Accompanying him on these trips were naturalist John Burroughs, inventor Thomas Edison, and tire magnate Harvey Firestone.

The 1918 excursion was the most ambitious of these trips, a long loop through the mountains of West Virginia, Tennessee, North Carolina, and Virginia. This trip is the topic of an article in a supplement to a recent issue of Automobile Magazine, "Pilgrimages: Eleven journeys in search of the Ford Motor Company's past."

For the article on the Henry Ford trip, "Camp Ford," author Michael Jordan and photographer Richard Newton traced the path of the 1918 excursion.

The trip began in Pittsburgh on August 18 and moved south into West Virginia. The author notes that the travelers did not exactly "rough it" on their trip as the entourage included two trucks, two large touring cars, and two Model T runabouts with a full crew to take care of the needs of Ford and his companions. (The modern trip was made in a Ford F-150 pickup.) At every crossroads, reporters and local residents met the group.

The group traveled through Elkins and spent the night of August 21 at the Cheat Mountain Club. After passing though Pocahontas County, they went into Virginia and moved south, passing through a corner of Tennessee and on to Asheville, North Carolina, before starting back north. The excursion ended at Hagerstown, Maryland, on September 1.

A number of well-known photographs survive from this trip. A modern photograph of the Cheat Mountain Club is used with the article along with one from the trip. Other 1918 photos accompany the article.

While tracing the 1918 trip, Mr. Jordan visited with Howard Hevener, of Arbovale. He shared with the author the stories he heard as a child about the excursion and photos of Ford and his fellow travelers.

Marlinton Middle School Principal resigns

Marlinton Middle School is again without a principal following the request by Glen Wade to be relieved from his duties at the school. His resignation from the position was accepted by the Board of Education at its meeting on Monday night.

According to a statement issued by Superintendent of Schools James Phares, Mr. Wade asked for reassignment for "personal and health reasons." Hillsboro School Principal Sue Hollandsworth will serve MMS as acting principal during the search for a replacement to Mr. Wade. In his statement, Dr. Phares said it is hoped to have a recommendation for the new principal to the Board on November 27.

The meeting began with an executive session on a student discipline matter. Following the session, the Board voted to approve the expulsion of a male student at Green Bank Elementary-Middle School for the remainder of the school year.

Ben Wilfong, student member of the Board, reported that student climate at the high school is good and things are flowing smoothly at the school. He said the changes made in the schedule have helped.

Mr. Wilfong also reported on plans to reestablish the peer mediation program at PCHS. Sixteen students have recently taken peer mediation training, he said. The purpose of the program is to have students involved to keep problems among students from escalating.

In personnel matters the Board approved the employment of:

* Kristi Weese as teacher of physical education at Hillsboro Elementary School and art at Marlinton Middle School

* Bernadette Rolleston and Katherine Snyder as teachers of the extended year program at Marlinton Elementary the effectiveness of the Dean of Students position. Should it prove effective in relationship to the total school program, the position may be established and posted at a later time.

Students will meet in an assembly of the student body and informed of the transition of principals. Also, there will be a review of the code of student conduct and of the consequences for breaking school and county regulations. A special emphasis will be placed on treating every other student and every faculty member with respect and dignity at all times.

A task force will immediately begin to identify those students who have been egregious in their behavior and who have disrupted the learning of other students. After identification, meetings with parents, and going through the proper procedures, these students will be moved into alternate settings for educational purposes. Students will be dealt with appropriately and respectfully, but will be retaught that the administration and teachers are responsible for the day-to-day decisions of the school operation.

Parents will be given the opportunity to bring issues and concerns directly to the principal concerning the operation of the school, teacher issues with their children, and instructional program planning. Parent concerns with faculty members should be placed in writing and parents must agree to meet with the teacher to discuss and resolve the issues face-to-face.

Teachers will be given assistance in data analysis, training in reading and writing across the curriculum, assistance in working with the Basic Skills and Success labs, and accelerated instruction in the use of computer technology [illegible]

C. C. Beck
Republican Candidate for Pocahontas County Commission

I, C. C. Beck, am a Republican candidate for Pocahontas County Commission, Southern District.

My wife, Janet, and I live on Beaver Creek. She is the daughter of the late Origen and Eula Underwood. I have one daughter and four sons. We are members of the First Baptist Church of Huntersville.

I was born and raised on a stock farm near Bethany, Brooke County. After high school, I served with the U.S. Marines. Upon discharge, I worked as a millwright for Weirton Steel. I then went into the State Police from which I retired in 1977.

I worked as superintendent for the Lancaster Construction Company who built the first 188 condo-charge, I worked as a millwright for Weirton Steel. I then went into the State Police from which I retired in 1977.

I worked as superintendent for the Lancaster Construction Company who built the first 188 condominiums at Snowshoe. After completion, I then went on to take a job as shop foreman on the Back Creek dam project. I later taught vocations at the Anthony Correctional Center. I served as Chief Deputy for the Sheriff Department for a little over seven years. I was later elected sheriff—I did not seek a second term.

While sheriff, I learned a lot about the way our tax money is being spent and that is why I decided to run for the commission seat. The sheriff, as chief administrative officer of the county, at one time or another has all checks coming through his office. Since I left office the budget has exploded.

I feel my experience of working with people will prove to be an asset. I feel I can work well with the other commissioners, and the other elected officials and public. However, I am not a yes man. I will not be controlled by politicians, special groups, or special interests. I am one of three votes. Our county has great potential for growth and development. This cannot be realized unless all the people join together in this effort.

In the last three weeks, four of our surrounding counties have had industries come in. I wonder if they looked at us? Higher paying jobs could be brought into the county if we would all work together and not let a few people control our lives by working against this. It takes Mom and Dad working to take care of their family. Then, when the children are out of school they have to leave the county in order to find a job with adequate income.

In 1966 when I came to this county, the population was over 10,000. Now there is less than 9,000. This includes those that have retired and come back as well as those who have come from other parts of the county and retired here. As I traveled around the county, I have counted 176 pieces of property for sale. Folks, this is our heritage running our farmers and timber out. The better paying jobs are government jobs. Since I came here we have lost Denmar Hospital, it is now a prison—but, at what cost? The Tannery in Marlinton went out, a shoe factory came in—now only a few people work there. The Tannery at Durbin has been out for some time. I believe we received a golden goose when we took over this. But what will be the cost of development into a state of usefulness? The county also owns a piece of property at Green Bank. I am unaware of any past or present efforts to develop this property.

Snowshoe pays better than half of the taxes taken in by the county. Most of the jobs are low paying and a lot of them are part-time.

We need all the people of the county working together, along with the commissioners, to establish initiatives which will help us reach a goal. The goal being to help ourselves and to bring about adequate jobs which will, in turn, keep our young people here.

If elected, I will be a full-time commissioner. I have no outside interests. I make no promises but I will give my best effort.

I will look closely at the budget, as well as past budgets, and give attention to each bill turned in.

While working as superintendent when Shamrock at Snowshoe was being constructed, I had over a hundred men working. Part of my duty was the construction and the payroll. I was also responsible to buy and keep supplies and material on the job. This was also true of the shop at Back Creek dam project.

As Sheriff, I had the responsibility for the budget of Law Enforcement, Jail, and Tax Department as well as the collection of all taxes for the county. As a State Trooper, I have been involved in a number of investigations, some of which were of embezzlement. I believe this experience helps make me fit and capable of the job.

I have visited with many of you. I will be out everyday, but it is impossible to visit everyone. Should you have any questions or just want to talk, you can reach me at 799-4682 evenings.

I would appreciate your vote and will welcome your support should I be elected on November 7.

Droop Mountain Battle Reenactment set for this weekend

This coming weekend, Saturday and Sunday, October 14-15, will find Civil War reenactors gathering at Droop Mountain Battlefield State Park for the biennial reenactment of the Battle of Droop Mountain. The West Virginia Reenactors Association and the park invite the public to this history filled weekend.

The original battle was fought on November 6, 1863, between Confederate forces under Gen. John Echols and Federal troops commanded by Gen. William Averell. The Federal force was moving south from Beverly as part of a two prong advance. Another Union army was moving east from the Kanawha Valley and the hope was to catch Echols, who was camped at Lewisburg, between the two armies.

Echols moved north to meet Averell and located his troops on the top of Droop Mountain. A skirmish was fought at Mill Point on the 5th. The following day Averell split his force in two. One part moved along the main road up Droop Mountain while the other circled to the Confederate left by way of Caesar Mountain.

After a fierce fight Echols withdrew and moved south into Virginia, avoiding the Federal force coming from the west.

The weekend will feature two reenactments. On Saturday the Mill Point skirmish is to be refought at 3 p.m. The Droop Mountain battle reenactment will take place at 1 p.m. on Sunday.

Other activities will be a part of the weekend, including:

* Ladies Social at 11 a.m. on Saturday

* Living History from 1 to 2:30 p.m. on Saturday

* Open Air Ball and Young Ladies' Cotillion from 8 to 10 p.m. on Saturday

* Church Service at 10 a.m. on Sunday.

Period music and dance instruction will be part of the ball, with a special opportunity for a "coming out" presentation for young ladies.

Authentic Civil War period camps will be open to the public from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m on Saturday and 9 a.m to 3 p.m. on Sunday. Visitors are invited to come walk through the camps, talk to the reenactors, and observe the artifacts and lifestyles of a bygone period.

During the weekend, the Reenactors Association will be raising money towards the purchase of new interpretive signs for the park. Selected fundraising activities, donations, and net profit from registrations will go towards this cause.

Hillsboro teacher wins national award and $25,000

by Gibbs Kinderman
Allegheny Mountain Radio

"Is $25,000 a big enough prize?" asked State Superintendent of Schools Dave Stewart.

"Noooo!" thundered the 90 Hillsboro Elementary students gathered in the school gym to hear the surprise announcement that teacher Cheryl Nelson had been awarded a prestigious Milken Family Foundation National Teacher Award.

Apparently jaded by Doug Van-Gundy-level TV quiz show prizes, the kids did not realize that Nelson was joining a select group of educators—only three in the entire State of West Virginia this year—who have been selected to receive one of the most lucrative awards in the education field.

Stewart, a former elementary school teacher, used an amusing gimmick to fire up the crowd. He had a series of large white cardboards and called kids out of the audience to hold up each in turn. The first had a dollar sign, the second a two. After each numbered card was shown, he asked students if the figure displayed was big enough to be a good prize.

STATE SCHOOL BOARD President J. D. Morris (left), Cheryl Nelson, and State School Superintendent David Stewart.

"Noo!"
"2,500?"
"Nooo!"

Stewart seemed a little nonplused when the students decided that $25,000 wasn't enough, either.

But Cheryl Nelson was more than satisfied. As a Milken Award teacher, Nelson will join 144 fellow year 2000 honorees for a three-day national conference in Los Angeles in spring 2001. Along with some 1,600 teachers who have been recognized by the Milken Family Foundation since the award's inception in 1987, Nelson will receive annual invitations to national conferences, all expenses paid, and will have the opportunity to participate in a variety of other events.

The Foundation, funded by junk bond king Michael Milken, and presided over by his brother, Lowell, first included West Virginia in its program in 1990. To date, 53 state teachers have won the award.

Nelson has taught for almost a decade. She is active in the West Virginia Geographic Alliance, was County Teacher of the Year in 1997 and has served as County Social Studies Coordinator. Although social studies is her favorite topic, she teaches a mixed age group of 8-to-10 year olds the whole spectrum of elementary school subjects.

And the big question: what is she going to do with the money?

Nelson said she'd have to talk it over with her husband, Leon, but she wanted to spend it on something that makes a real difference in their lives.

Grand Rally Day in Marlinton October 21

On October 26, 1900, the first train chugged its way into Marlinton to a crowd of 1200 to 3000 people. A Grand Rally that day marked the beginning of freight and passenger trains that boosted the economy and put the Town of Marlinton on the map.

The Greenbrier River Trail Association, with help from other organizations, is celebrating the occasion by recreating the festivities of the original rally, to be held Saturday, October 21.

"We've been working on this for months," said Gail Lowry, Director of the Pocahontas County Convention and Visitors Bureau. "We have an original poster for the event and we are following it as close as possible."

The day's festivities will start with an open house at the Visitor center in Marlinton at 2 p.m. Dignitaries, media and the public have been invited to attend the unveiling of the Millennium Legacy Trail sign for the Greenbrier River Trail.

The afternoon events will be held along the trail and at the Marlinton Elementary School. Nineteen hundred-style games and contests will be organized for young and young-at-heart. Local groups will cook a barbecue feast and hot-air balloon rides will take thrill-seekers above the treetops.

Everyone is invited to dress in the style of the 1900s. The "Queen of Love and Beauty" will be chosen from those in costume and will rule over the Coronation Ball that evening.

The James Madison University Ballroom and folk Dance Club will host an afternoon workshop at 4 p.m. to teach waltz steps and exciting variations to use at the Evening Gala. Get a head start on the fun at 7:30 p.m. by attending a contra dance workshop to learn how to swing and walk through some contra dance figures.

The evening dance will be held at the newly renovated Opera House. The Gala will be traditional dances and games from around the world with a focus on Appalachian dances and their European ancestors. All dances will be taught and no experience is necessary. We suggest you bring a partner or a friend to the evening, as many of the dances will be done in pairs. Live music with Frosty Morning, instruction by Katie Thomas.

Frosty Morning began as an Old Time string band. They pursued the roots of Southern Appalachian music back into its Celtic origins. Their intriguing sets of songs, reels, jigs and unaccompanied ballads, waltzes and airs stem from their deep love and knowledge of traditional music.

Come enjoy this 100th Anniversary Celebration as Marlinton and Pocahontas county relive their history and honor the past.

For more information, contact the Pocahontas County Convention & Visitors Bureau at 1-800-336-7009.

Civil War Scholar McPherson to deliver McCreight lecture

The West Virginia Humanities Council has announced that the noted Civil War scholar and Pulitzer Prize-winning author James M. McPherson, will deliver the Council's annual Betsy K. McCreight Lecture in the Humanities on October 19 in Charleston. McPherson will speak on "Was Blood Thicker than Water? Ethnic and Civic Nationalism in the Civil War" at 7:30 p. m. in the auditorium of the University of Charleston.

James McPherson, a Princeton University history professor, is considered among the greatest historians of the American Civil War. He has authored a dozen books about the Civil War and more than 100 articles and reviews. His Pulitzer Prize-winning bestseller, Battle Cry of Freedom: The Civil War Era (1988) is considered by many the best single-volume history of the American Civil War and is credited with generating widespread popular interest in the conflict across the nation. Published as a volume in the Oxford History of the United States series, the book helped pave the way for the success and critical acclaim of the 1990 PBS documentary "The Civil War," for which McPherson served as an advisor. He was named the 200 Jefferson Lecturer in the Humanities by the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Jefferson Lecture is the highest honor the federal government bestows for distinguished intellectual achievement in the humanities.

In addition to his distinguished scholarship, McPherson is an ardent preservationist. He has served on the boards of two nonprofit organizations dedicated to preserving and protecting Civil War battlefields—the Civil War Trust and the Association for the Preservation of Civil War sites. These two organizations have saved nearly 10,000 acres of endangered battlefield land at more than fifty sites in fifteen states.

McPherson has taught for nearly forty years at Princeton, where he holds the title of George Henry David '86 Professor of American History.

Dr. McPherson's McCreight Lecture is free and open to the public. A dessert reception and book signing will follow the program. A selection of his books will be available for purchase at the lecture. For more information, contact the West Virginia Humanities Council, by phone at (304) 346-8500 or via e-mail at wvhuman@wvhc.com.

Wesley Chapel Church Celebrates 100 Year Anniversary

Wesley Chapel United Methodist Church, in Hillsboro, celebrated 100 years in the present building on September 10, 2000, with approximately 125 people present. During the morning Worship Service, Ronnie Hall shared a little bit of the church history, and other members and visitors also shared some of their memories of the Church. Edith Workman shared the fact that although the present church building is only 100 years old, the church as a congregation is much older than that, and it is believed to be the oldest church in existence west of the Allegheny Mountains.

The Congregation of the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church, who has strong ties to Wesley Chapel, attended the service. At one time when the old Wesley Chapel Church burned, the Presbyterian Church showed Christian love and compassion by allowing the Methodist congregation to use their building for Worship Services while the new building was being erected. The church building that now stands was dedicated on October 21, 1900.

The present pastor, Rev. Phyllis Cox, preached the sermon.

At the conclusion of the Worship Service the women of the church served a wonderful covered dish dinner.

After dinner, the children released balloons with their names and addresses inside, telling anyone who found one that this was in commemoration of 100 years as Church, and asking them to respond. It will be interesting to see how far they may have traveled.

The service was concluded by a visit from Rev. Claude Backus (portrayed by Randy Hall), a Circuit Riding Preacher. He arrived on horseback, and a short history of the Circuit Rider was presented.

Motions for new trial denied

Gelis sentenced to life without mercy

A convicted murderer's criticism of court proceedings did nothing to sway Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe from imposing the mandatory sentence for murder in the first degree Monday.

Jolliffe not only sentenced Roger Paul Gelis, 57, to life in prison with no mercy, but also denied two defense motions for a new trial.

"In my judgment you received a fair trial, Mr. Gelis," Jolliffe told the defendant.

"The only thing I can say is Josef Stalin would be proud of all of you," Gelis responded when the judge asked him if he'd like to speak. "There was no truth in this trial."

Gelis took the stand in his own defense during his four-day trial, denying any involvement in Melba Hickson Fitzgerald's murder and avowing his love for her.

Gelis was convicted in August of the murder of Fitzgerald, his live-in companion and business partner.

Fitzgerald's nude, decapitated body was found in a hand-dug water reservoir near Dunmore on property in which Gelis claimed to have an interest.

Her severed head was found near the couple's Stony Bottom residence.

Gelis' trial was moved to Greenbrier County because of public sentiment here.

"We don't follow the rules of Josef Stalin," Jolliffe said, noting rather, that the court operated under the standards of Thomas Jefferson.

Jolliffe had previously denied two defense motions for a new trial. Those motions were based on the circumstantial evidence put on by the State and problems at the State Police criminal laboratory in Charleston.

Defense attorney Eugene Simmons said he was bothered that the State had not introduced any evidence of where they thought the murder took place and the "rumblings out of the State Police Lab."

Simmons said some evidence had not been tested at all.

Circumstantial evidence was "strong enough for the jury to find a verdict of murder in the first degree," Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford noted.

Weiford also reminded the court that Simmons could have tested evidence himself.

"That's the same evidence Mr. Simmons didn't want to see and didn't want to test in June, as I recall," the prosecutor said.

Problems in the State Police Laboratory are confined to drug lab, Weiford said.

The prosecutor's case was built on evidence that Gelis was angry with Fitzgerald because she had interfered in an affair he was having with her 18-year-old niece, Kim-Shea Galford. Both Gelis and Galford admitted to the affair in court.

Jolliffe said he had learned from his own inquiries into the situation at the State Police Lab that the blood evidence and trace evidence laboratories had been certified.

The judge elaborated on case law that supports a conviction based on circumstantial evidence. Jolliffe said the West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has ruled that circumstantial evidence can be used properly to reach a conviction and has indicated that no real difference between direct and circumstantial evidence exists.

Gelis has the right to appeal both the conviction and the sentence and has 30 days to file notice of any appeal.

He will not have the possibility of parole.

SUSAN PIERCE, DEPUTY State Historic Preservation Officer, center, presented the certificate placing the Opera House on the National Register of Historic Places to Ruth Morgan, President of the Pocahontas County Historic Landmarks Commission. Charles Tilton, son of J. G. Tilton, who had the Opera House constructed, is at the left.

Marlinton Opera House placed on National Register of Historic Places

In 1910-11, J. G. Tilton had the present opera house constructed to provide a location for cultural and entertainment events for the people of the growing community of Marlinton. Although it filled this role for a few years, unfortunately the building has been used in other ways for most of its existence.

However, this year has seen the building returned to its original use after several years of restoration under the leadership of the Pocahontas County Historic Landmarks Commission.

Saturday was a busy day at the Opera House with two musical groups performing for the public.

The day was also special in two ways. One was the announcement that the facility has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places. The other was the attendance of Charles Tilton, one of the four children of J. G. Tilton, and a large group of other Tilton Family members.

Susan Pierce, Deputy State Historic Officer with the state Division of Culture and History, presented the national register certificate to Ruth Morgan, President of the Landmarks Commission.

Ms. Pierce congratulated the Landmarks Commission for the progress made on restoring the opera house and said she shares in their dream for the future of the facility.

She also briefly discussed the reviewed some of the ways her agency and various laws can assist with historic preservation. Among them are grants and tax credits for investing in historic properties. She noted there is a state tax exemption for investment in historic residential properties.

Sam Brill served as master of ceremonies for the day's activities. He is a member of the Opera House Foundation, formed to be in charge of the operation of the facility, and serves as the coordinator between the Foundation and the Landmarks Commission. He noted the presence of Charles Tilton, son of J. G. Tilton, and other members of the Tilton family who were present at the program.

Mr. Brill introduced the members of the Commission - Ruth Morgan, Jessie Powell, Madge Bledsoe, Moffett McNeel, and John Mutscheller. He spoke about the importance of Ms. Morgan to the restoration of the Opera House. She saw the potential of the facility, Mr. Brill said, and has been the driving force behind the project.

He also introduced the other members of the Opera House Foundation - Doug Van-Gundy, President, Ginger Must, John Mutscheller, Emma Beard, Rene White, Donna Gibson, Lauren Bennett, and Harold Crist.

Much work has been done on the building by volunteers, Mr. Brill noted, and he used Ed Wagner as an example.

Ms. Pierce congratulated the Landmarks Commission for the progress made on restoring the opera house and said she shares in their dream for the future of the facility.

She also briefly discussed the goal of the Division of Culture and History and its preceding agency, the West Virginia Antiquity Commission, to preserve the historic resources of the state. Ms. Pierce recently indicated its willingness to to donate land for a school.

However, at this time a joint school is only a discussion and neither board indicated a willingness let the school be in the other county.

Dr. Phares suggested that the local school improvement committee of the Valley Head School meet with prospective members of the LSIC for a Slaty Fork school to discuss the issue. Representatives from both groups then meet with the two boards with recommendations on a collaborative proposal.

Rhonda Withers, Christie Weese, and Sandra Brock, cheerleading coachess at the two middle schools, met with the Board concerning supplements for their positions. They reported that in other counties middle school cheerleading coaches receive from $500 $1200. They again reminded the Board that middle school cheerleading is now recognized as a sport by the Secondary School Activities Commission and they put a great amount of effort into working with the cheerleaders.

Fran Nystrom, a daughter of Charles Tilton, thanked everyone involved for the restoration of the building on behalf of her family. She introduced the family members present and said this occasion has brought the family together for a reunion.

Charles Tilton made some remarks about his father.

J. G. Tilton was born at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, on June 14, 1874, and was educated at Kenyon College and Oberlin Business College. He came to Pocahontas County in 1902 as a court reporter and other positions at the court house, including Circuit Clerk from 1907 to 1909.

In 1907 Mr. Tilton and Dwight Alexander built the first opera house in Marlinton. It was located on the lot on the north side of the existing building.

It must have been a success, for in 1910 work was begun on the present Opera House. In October 1911, Mr. Tilton also went into the newspaper business when he purchased the Marlinton Messenger. The name of the paper was changed to The Republican News and the paper's office was moved to the Opera House.

Mr. Tilton said his father also got married in 1911, in February, to Veva M. Dilley. They had four children, three boys, Victor, Curtis, and Charles, and one daughter, Millie.

In 1913 the Tiltons left Marlinton and went to Morgantown where Mr. Tilton worked at the [illegible] employed as Chief Clerk in the Department of Agriculture. From 1917 to 1930 he worked for the State Road Commission. From 1930 until his death in 1945, Mr. Tilton ran a grocery store.

Michael Gioulis, a historic preservation consultant who has advised on the Opera House project, also made a few remarks. He said the project is credit to the Landmarks Commission and all who are involved. He said it is important that the Opera House project involves not only restoration of an historic building but the reuse of the facility. He stressed that a goal of historic preservation should be to put properties back into use.

Mr. Gioulis stated that historic preservation has value for a community in several ways. It gives residents a sense of their history and roots, helps to revitalize downtown sections, and also has an economic value. He said heritage tourism is a growing part of the travel industry. In 1996 this aspect of West Virginia's tourism involved over 500 jobs and over $15 million in revenue, Mr. Gioulis said.

For the afternoon program, the Strawberry Wine Barbershop Quartet, from Lewisburg, sang a selection of traditional songs. A reception was hosted by the Foundation and Landmarks Commission.

In the evening the Irish-Appalachian band, Poteen, from Monroe County, gave a benefit concert for the Opera House restoration project. Schoolcraft/Auldridge Reunion Report

On August 19, approximately 66 descendants and friends of the Schoolcraft and Auldridge families arrived at Watoga State Park for their annual reunion. There were relatives arriving from North Carolina, Maryland, Indiana, and Virginia, along with the local and West Virginia residents as well. It was a real joy to see some cousins who attended the reunion for the first time. We dug right into setting the table, preparing the food, and reminiscing about the "olden days" while the children played and became acquainted with cousins they had never met before. Some of the younger adults participated in a game of horseshoe.

A friend of the family, Rev. Norman Alderman, said grace, and a wonderful meal was enjoyed by all. After lunch, Danny McLaughlin and Lee Gurley played their guitars while several members of the family joined in to sing some beautiful hymns and ballads.

Grimes Reunion

The annual Grimes Reunion was held Sunday, August 6, 2000, at the Mill Run shelter near Frost. The day began with signing in and fellowshipping of old and new. Everyone was glad to see family who attended last year and anxious to meet any unknown relatives.

A moment of silence was held for those who had passed away since last year's reunion: Kay Grimes, Martha Srouse Wyatt, Donald Cain, William Arlie Birchfield, Veva Birchfield Ware, Dorothy Sprouse Christerson, Ronnie Simmons, and Georgene Grimes Cutlip. They will be sadly missed, especially at future reunions.

Gifts were given out for the oldest persons present: Oliver Sprouse, male, and Verah Mentzer, female; newlyweds; [illegible]

Local teachers attend Reading Mentor Teacher Training

West Virginia Department of Education will use a comprehensive approach to improve reading skills across the state. The "Reading for All" plan consists of three phases: Learn to Read, for pre-kindergarten through 3rd grade; Read to Learn," 5th through 12th grade; and "Read to Succeed," adult education. During this five-year implementation plan, emphasis will be placed on Grades K-3, because this is where students construct their foundation for later reading success. The "Reading for All" plan includes specialized teaching training in the 7 Dimensions of Reading for a staff member from Hillsboro and Marlinton Elementary. Chris Campbell and Barb Lewis attended Reading Mentor Teacher training in Charleston in June. They will continue to receive ongoing training on reading instruction strategies during the next 2 years. In return, they will provide intensive training to their respective staffs. "By ensuring that every child can read, we're helping to provide that child with a good start in school—a start that will lead to success in life."

Old hotel in Durbin to be torn down

by Jason Bauserman

The old Greenbrier Hotel in Durbin will soon be history.

Frank Proud, owner of Durbin Outfitters next door announced Monday to Durbin Town Council that he has purchased the 100-year-old structure from owners Jason and Julia Bauserman.

"The hotel is coming down probably before November or December," Proud said.

The council approved a trail loop from the Durbin Depot down to the lagoon and back, as proposed by Proud, who also proposed a walking trail on the old Staunton-to-Parkersburg Turnpike through the center of town.

Council members Thelma Smith and Tom Kinder said they thought some sections of the turnpike were now privately owned. Proud withdrew his second proposal until more research is done.

On behalf of the West Virginia-Rails-to-Trails Association, Proud presented Mayor Paula Dilley with $1000 for use on the proposed kiosk and the West Fork Connector Trail.

The mayor announced that the West Virginia Department of Highways has nearly completed new pavement of roads in Durbin under the Orphan Roads program. According to Dilley berms still need to be constructed. R. H. Armstrong Contractors will receive $46,000 from the state for their work.

"I hope everyone is happy," Dilley commented. She also noted that new asphalt must replace any dug-through sections.

Other business items included:

•Renee Downing was chosen as the new recorder/treasurer in a special meeting held August 11.

•Donna Rexrode will clean the office for a $10 monthly fee.

•The Jasper Stull property needs a new drainpipe replacement.

•Three building permits were granted to Bill Rexrode, Tina Walther and Bonnie Plyler.

•Council approved a 50¢ an hour raise for Mike Johnson to $6 per hour.

•Dilley announced that the Department of Environmental Protection will check the sewage system September 12. Sonar sewage chemical was received and spread on the lagoon September 1.

•This meeting was Recorder/Treasurer Nancy Benetato's last meeting. She announced that state auditor Harold Fortner found no infractions in the July audit. The state gave Benetato an unencumbered balance on all three town funds—general, sewer and coal severance.

...Seat on Marlinton Town Council

Marlinton Town Council met for its regular meeting on September 5.

The Corps of Engneers representative was not present and the report was read. The only significant item was that the non-structural alternative will take additional time and will be presented in October. A few additional drillings are being made.

Mary K. Mclaughlin expressed her opposition to the alley behind her property being fenced, mentioning that the sewer line and water line go down that alley; also, propane gas tank should go on owners' property and not near power pole or other property.

Council reported that they had looked at alley in question and they decided that it will not be fenced; oil tank might be a liability, and the request will not be permitted.

For the record Council voted to disallow placing a tank in the alley and fence must be on the Boggs' property.

Kenneth Faulknier commended the Town for the new sign at the entrance to the cemetery but he feels another sign should be placed at the road from Rt. 39 directing people to the cemetery, and he asked that, if possible, it be placed before next Memorial Day.

Three candidates—David Cain, Reid Mitchell and Dennis Driscoll—of the six presented at the last Council meeting, were present and gave a brief presentation to council members.

The Select Committee joined the Council in a vote for a person to replace Keith Moore as a Council member.

Sue Helton and Dean Jones were named from the audience to help Linda McLaughlin count the ballots.

They reported that of the nine votes, Dennis Driscoll received a majority of five votes, so he was sworn in by the Recorder.

At the request of Robin Mutscheller, Council voted to have a committee of two members and a town employee to recognize volunteers who go out of their way to improve the town and make it a better place. Mutscheller, Loretta Malcomb and Linda McLaughlin were named. Some presentations will be made at the October meeting.

Gibb reported from the Sign Committee with the recommendation that the Town abide by Outdoor Advertising on State Highways regulations and that it apply to all streets. They recommended one sign on one road and on one property, size limit 18x24 plus the outside designation. Council approved abiding by the State rules. Discussion followed on the need for generally addressing signs in and on buildings and windows, etc.

Engineer Dewayne Hannah reported the Health Department requested a minor correction to remove a device from a booster station. He also presented an estimate for a water line extension to Beard Heights, down old road to Buckeye and back up 219, at a cost of $1,771,900, taking a line from the Museum area. This does not include the hospital's approximately $450,000 debt on the present system, which is a problem, leaving that discussion up to official bodies. He thinks taking the water from the Town water plant is the best route.

Building permits issued for August were to Richard Burgess, 815 2nd Avenue, renovations; John Mallow, Jr., 714 3rd Avenue, renovations.

The Mayor reported the State Health Department had helped detect four leaks in water lines and they have been corrected. Everything they know how to do has been done to find the leaks.

After a discussion on policing needs, the item was tabled.

A change in garbage rates was presented in ordinance form and read and approved on first reading. The ordinance will be published for two times and a second reading will be held at the regular meeting on October 3. The proposed rate for household garbage collection is $12.50 per month, up from $11, with various increases in business classes, with a projected increase of $2520 per two months billing period.

Council met in an emergency meeting Wednesday, September 6. Mayor Dunbrack announced he had received a certified letter that day from the West Virginia Division of Environmental Protection listing deficiencies in the collection system, enclosing an offer of administrative settlement of $76,750 for violations found in a sampling inspection February 23, asking for reply by April 7. He showed his reply of March 31 listing things that had been corrected. This is the first he has heard since then. He will meet in Romney Thursday with officials.

Plans were made for forms for more detailed work records, etc.

'Sound' from space opens dedication ceremony for new telescope

At the crowd gathered for the long awaited dedication of the new radio telescope at the National Radio Astronomy Observatory's Green Bank site on Friday, August 25, few probably took note of sound coming from the sound system speakers.

However, the signalmore of the sound was explained by Green Bank Site Director Phillip Jewell when he opened the dedication program. He asked the group to listen for a moment and then reported that the sound was converted from radio waves from a pulsar (the core of exploded stars) and being received by the new telescope as he spoke.

With obvious pleasure, Dr. Jewell pointed out that this means "it works." He said the scope made its first reception on August 22.

The new instrument, now named the "Robert C. Byrd Green Bank Telescope," is the largest fully steerable radio telescope in the world. The scope's design and steerability will give it access to 85% of the sky.

In addition to the size of the scope's receiving surface, 100 meters by 110 meters, the instrument has other features to enhance its ability to gather radio emissions from space. The receiving surface is made up of 2004 panels which will be adjusted to overcome the effects of weather and gravity that otherwise would distort the shape of the reflecting surface.

Also, the feed arm of the scope is offset instead of being centrally located as on other telescopes. This will reduce the interference to incoming radio waves as much as is possible.

Laser systems are used to control both the location of the scope and the adjustment of the scope receiving surface.

The events leading up to Friday's program began in November 1968 with the collapse of the 300 foot telescope at Green Bank. That scope began operation in 1962 and was planned for use for only a few years, while the observatory's 140 foot telescope was being completed.

Astronomers present at that time had begun to see the possibilities of the 300 foot, the 300 foot proved to be a useful instrument and was used far beyond its design life. With its collapse, the United States was left with no large single dish radio telescope. Single dish telescopes are valuable for picking up weak, large-scale radio emissions that interferometers cannot handle. Interferometers use telescopes made up of a number of smaller single dish instruments that are spaced at the same radio wavelength.

The new telescope is 485 feet tall at the tip of the feed arm when it is at its highest position. There are 16 million tons of material in the structure.

Widener Hunter suggested that the program, providing a warm, sunny day. More than 2000 people, coming from both within and without the United States, as well as a good turn-out of local folks, attended the program.

Following the opening by Dr. Jewell, the posting of colors was conducted by the West Virginia Army National Guard. The national anthem was played by members of the Pocahontas County High School Band and the members of Cub Scout Pack 112, Green Bank, led the pledge of allegiance.

The invocation was given by Father Thomas Acker, President of Wheeling Jesuit University.

Paul Vanden Bout, Director of the NRAO, gave a welcome and introduced the people on the speaker's platform and several other people attending the program.

Dr. Vanden Bout said the new telescope was a combined effort of many people, including * the astronomers at NRAO and around the world who developed the concept for a telescope for the 21st Century

* the National Science Foundation for the vision and courage to approve the project
* the NRAO staff for the innovative design of the scope
* Bob Hall, project manager
* Centar, the contractor
* Ironworkers Local No. 607
* Operating Engineers Local No. 923
* Sen. Byrd

Dr. Vanden Bout reminded the audience that a construction project such as this one is hard and dangerous work and often comes at human cost. This was the case with the scope, he said, as one worker, Nick Wells, lost his life in an accident. Dr. Vanden Bout said Mr. Wells' wife, Bonnie, son Jason, and parents, Jean and Bill Wells were present for the ceremony. A moment of silence was held in memory of Mr. Wells. His name is welded onto the structure of the telescope.

Daniel Goldin, Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, expressed appreciation to Sen. Byrd for his efforts to keep the telescope constructed. He said some people predicted doom and gloom for the observatory when the 300 foot scope fell, but Sen. Byrd helped to shift the focus to building a replacement telescope.

Mr. Goldin spoke about a joint effort between NASA and NRAO that extended the life of the Voyager Spacecraft. When the craft had gotten beyond where NASA's instruments could pick up signals, NRAO made available its Very Large Array to pick up signals, Mr. Goldin said.

Among the uses of the new telescope, Mr. Goldin said, will be to study:

* clouds of gas and dust around the youngest stars, which may be forming new planets
* how stars are born, the first step in understanding how life may have originated in the universe
* pulsars, our window to the extremes of matter in space.

Mr. Goldin stated that "today we celebrate the start of an exciting new era in radio astronomy and continued science excellence of the NSF and NRAO."

Dr. Riccardo Giacconi, President of Associated Universities, Inc., made brief remarks and introduced Dr. Rita Colwell, Director of the National Science Foundation. (AUI is a non-profit association of several universities and operates the NRAO for the National Science Foundation.)

Dr. Colwell noted that the dedication of the new telescope comes as the NSF is celebrating its 50th anniversary. "It's a great occasion to launch this telescope on its own journey to discoveries we cannot now imagine," she said.

Radio astronomy and the NSF have grown together, Dr. Colwell stated, and "largely with NSF support, the United States has both the world's premiere radio astronomy facilities and led the world in this scientific field."

Dr. Colwell mentioned some of the scientific discoveries made at Green Bank:

* study of the pulsar in the Crab Nebula illuminated the nature of pulsars
* important observations of the neutral hydrogen spectra that signify star formation
* it was shown convincingly that Gabor waves are bent by gravity, helping to verify Einstein's prediction.

She predicted the Robert C. Byrd Telescope will be the workhorse at Green Bank for decades to come. "We expect to probe such mysteries as the birth of galaxies in the early universe, the birth of stars, and the chemical composition of interstellar dust and gas," Dr. Colwell said.

Dr. Colwell expressed appreciation to Sen. Byrd for securing the appropriation for the telescope and his support over the years of construction. She also praised his support for educational programs at Green Bank.

In introducing the senator, Dr. Colwell said, "It's no exaggeration to say that without Sen. Byrd, this telescope would not be here today."

Sen. Byrd began his remarks

WITH THE ROBERT C. Byrd Green Bank Telescope behind him, Sen. Byrd makes a point during his speech at the dedication ceremony.

PREPARING TO CUT the ribbon to complete the dedication of the new telescope are, Dr. Riccardo Giacconi, Dr. Philip Jewell, Sen. Robert Byrd, Father Thomas Acker, Dr. Rita Colwell, and Dr. Paul Vanden Bout.

Opera House to host Tilton Family, special music

The Pocahontas County Historic Landmarks Commission and the Opera House Foundation are delighted to be welcoming descendants and extended family members of J.G. Tilton and his wife, Evva Dilley Tilton, a county native, to the Opera House Events on Saturday, September 23.

Mr. Tilton came into the area from Ohio as a Court Reporter, became aware of the need for a community gathering place for the growing citizenry and built the Opera House. Now 90 years later historic restoration and rehabilitation of this notable facility, the oldest reinforced concrete building in West Virginia, will retain the character and integrity of Pocahontas County's early development. It will provide a much needed handicap-accessible indoor facility for cultural and educational programs that will enhance the quality of living for today and future generations in Pocahontas County.

Excitement is growing for the two upcoming events at the Opera House, located on Third Avenue in Marlinton, on Saturday, September 23. Volunteers, led by Sam Brill, Project Coordinator, are busily at work painting woodwork and completing other partial interior aspects.

"For the Future—Building On The Past," the afternoon event beginning at 2:30 p.m. will give the opportunity to view interior restoration/rehabilitation to date of a unique historic building built in 1910. It is now a historic preservation project of the Pocahontas County Historic Landmarks Commission to again provide a venue for an integral part of today's quality of living. The afternoon program will include a surprise announcement and the fantastic "Strawberry Wine" Barbershop Quartet, of Lewisburg, blending their vocal chords in a repertoire of pleasing melodies, and donning costumes for their performance. A reception will follow. Admission is free.

The evening event "Setting the Stage," a Benefit Performance for the Opera House Restoration Project beginning at 7 p.m., will bring to the area the much acclaimed "Poteen" Irish musical performing group. Your feet will feel like tapping and your heart will be singing too!

There will be drawings for surprise gifts. The Marlinton Woman's Club will host refreshments at intermission. Admission is a donation of $6; children under 12, $4.

The Pocahontas County Historical Museum will be open between the two events at the Opera House. Admission will be free.

WVU Alumni host Mountaineer Spirit Day in Greenbrier Valley

Mark your calendars! The Greenbrier Valley Chapter of the West Virginia University Alumni Association will host Mountaineer Spirit Day on Thursday, October 12.

The WVU Marching Band will offer a free performance for the community and area schools at 2 p.m. at Greenbrier East High School Stadium. Also, a kick-off party will take place at The Brier Inn in Lewisburg beginning at 7 p.m. for West Virginia University alumni, parents and fans to watch the WVU vs. Virginia Tech football game.

Tickets for the kick-off party include admission, hors d'oeuvres, door prizes and more. Gelis convicted of murder

A Greenbrier County jury took two hours and 45 minutes to convict the man accused here of murdering his live-in companion and business partner.

Roger Gelis, 57, was found guilty of the murder of 41-year-old Melba Fitzgerald in September, 1999.

Fitzgerald's nude, decomposed body was found in a spring box on property in which Gelis claimed to have an interest.

Gelis showed no emotion while the verdict was read. Members of Fitzgerald's family seated in the audience behind him wept openly.

The case was moved to Greenbrier County due to public sentiment in Pocahontas County.

Katherine Barker, Fitzgerald's sister, released a statement to the media following the verdict.

"On September 8, 1999, our family was faced with a tragedy that has turned our lives upside down. After almost a year, it's a relief to finally be at this point—to see Roger Gelis convicted of murder in the first degree," the statement said.

"There is no doubt in any family member's mind Roger is guilty. We have known Roger for as many years as he had known Melba and have seen what he is capable of," it continued.

The statement also said the family did not believe Gelis could have acted alone.

Prosecuting Attorney Walt Welford said he was pleased with the result.

"I hope Melba's family can somehow put this behind them and get on with their lives," he said.

Fitzgerald's family held private funeral services for her Saturday. Her body was recently released from the medical examiner's office in Morgantown.

Gelis' attorney, Eugene Simmons, said he would appeal the verdict.

The jury recommended no mercy, meaning Gelis will never be eligible for parole.

He will be sentenced October 2 in Greenbrier County.

Roger Gelis spoke to the jury Wednesday in the form of an audio case against Gelis would [illegible] Greenbrier County [illegible] [illegible] business partner had been found dead, placing blame on neighbors for her murder.

"We've found Melba's body in the spring behind your house. What do you got to say about that?" Dale asked Gelis.

"What do I got to say about that? Those dirty bunch of bastards ought to be hung for that," Gelis replied, at times referring to "that Turner bunch."

Gelis repeatedly asked Dale to confirm that Fitzgerald was dead.

"It's not right. You're saying she's over there in the well. That's crazy," Gelis said as he kept "[illegible] ain't there and you know it."

He admitted that he had been to the A-frame house on the property the day before and had looked at the spring box, but dismissed only seeing tires and trouble in the water.

Fitzgerald's body was tied to a cinder block and the rear axle of a vehicle with coaxial cable. Tires were also in the well.

Gelis said his son, Toby, was purifying the water and had placed the boards there to [illegible] tampering.

The defendant appeared [illegible] his son was being blamed for Fitzgerald's death, telling Dale and Lieutenant Jim [illegible] that [illegible] a good boy. He [illegible] their residence early in the morning on Wednesday and was drunk, vowing to have an affair to show Gelis how it felt. "That's when I figured, well, I've been screwing around a little bit, I guess she said 'I'm gonna fix you. You'll see how it feels,'" Gelis said.

In previous testimony, Fitzgerald's sister, 19-year-old Kandiss Gafford, said she had been having an affair with Gelis, causing her sons to confront her on several occasions. Gelis had told her he and Fitzgerald were about to split up, she testified.

Gelis said Fitzgerald left that morning and did not return, causing her daughter to worry. And, Gelis said, Mandy Fitzgerald's worry caused him to be upset.

"She had me so damned worried I just, you know, I just went to pieces a couple times because she was bawling, carrying on," he said.

Gelis said he had been in "such a state" over the days prior to his arrest, explaining "a state of no sleep, can't eat, just, you know. Mandy comes around, she can't come around without bawling, then she gets me in about the same damned state, that something's wrong."

Gelis said he had been to the A-frame to check on the property twice that week, but his statements conflicted. At one point he said he'd been there Wednesday and Friday and at others said he'd visited the property on Thursday and Friday.

Jurors were allowed to read a transcript of the tape as it played since the recording was sometimes barely audible over the court room's sound system. However, Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe instructed the jury to rely on what it heard, rather than the transcript.

Dale also testified about his participation in the investigation, including the discovery of Fitzgerald's body in the spring box and her skull found near her residence several miles away.

Dale said when he arrived at the A-frame, he looked into the spring box. "I saw what I thought was a body," he said; however, Dale testified he did not know the identification of the body at the time. He accompanied Lt. Simmons as find Gelis and was present for the [illegible] returning [illegible] A-frame and then [illegible] Gelis' Buick where [illegible] and Fitzgerald lived.

[illegible] examiner Dr. James [illegible] said that he performed the [illegible] Fitzgerald's body. Frost [illegible] her body had been in [illegible] since decomposed as it [illegible] had it been on the [illegible] buried.

The back of the skull had irregular cuts, Frost testified. The decapitation could not have taken place in one blow, he testified. He said the implements used to behead Fitzgerald was something heavy with a cutting edge that was fairly sharp.

Although Frost testified that he found no metallic residue in the brain and no gunpowder stippling, he did not rule out a gunshot wound as the cause of death because the body had been in water and the brain in the possess of skull found buried in Jenny Bottom had decomposed. Frost testified that in reconstructing the skull, he found an area of slight defect where portions of the skull were missing. Frost said he could find no exit wound.

"I have high suspicion there may have been a gunshot wound, but I don't have an intact skull area," he said.

In addition to the head traumas, Fitzgerald also suffered multiple stab wounds and cuts throughout her throat and torso. Frost said he could not determine when these wounds occurred in relation to Fitzgerald's death.

The medical examiner said he could find no evidence of drugs, either prescription or recreational. Although he could not determine a specific time of death, Frost testified Fitzgerald had been dead several days when she was found.

Frost collaborated with Julie Mathers Saul, director of a forensic anthropology lab in Toledo, Ohio, who pieced together Fitzgerald's skull in an attempt to determine the cause of death.

"One of the main things I do is to identify otherwise unidentifiable remains," she testified.

Saul said Frost had contacted her in early February and sent her fragments of the skull, some of which was missing. The edges of the fractures were consistent with "perimortem trauma," or trauma that occurred close the time of death, but she could not say if the trauma occurred before or after death.

Saul said Fitzgerald had sustained a "tremendous amount of fracturing," making it difficult to tell whether she died from blunt force or a gunshot wound. Some of the fracturing could have been [illegible]

[illegible] wound to [illegible] an [illegible] wound, part of a circle, but I can't say for sure," she testified.

The defense did not cross examine Saul.

Water tested for acid

Wayne Morganroth, who is employed by the Bureau of Public Health in the environmental chemistry lab, testified that he had been asked to test a sample of water from the spring house where Fitzgerald's body was recovered.

Morganroth said that although the request was for a test of muriatic acid, he was unable to test for that specific chemical; however, he testified that the ions in the water were consistent with a high concentration of muriatic acid.

"Only the constituents that make up muriatic acid (hydrogen ions and chloride ions) are present in the sample," he said. "The presence of both indicate that muriatic acid is most likely present."

Sharon Ross, who works at Quality Farm and Fleet in Elkins, testified on the previous day that Gelis had purchased 15 gallons of muriatic acid from her, telling her that he wanted to dissolve a deer that had fallen into his well.

Morganroth said the water was more acetic than normal well water, which generally has a pH level [illegible] were present at 100,000 times [illegible] normal levels, he said.

"The entry acid consistent with the findings is consistent with," Morganroth said.

Under cross examination, by defense attorney R. David Arrington, Morganroth said he received only one sample of water from the well and no other for comparison.

DNA tests match victim

Trooper Darren Francis, who works in the West Virginia State Police forensic lab in South Charleston, testified that he had identified blood samples on a 1988 Ford F150 pickup truck owned by Fitzgerald, a brush hook, boat [illegible] and several other items, including a bag of hair samples.

Francis said he transferred the blood samples to another morgue for DNA testing.

Tim Smith, who is stationed at the Criminal Investigation Bureau Lab in South Charleston, said he determined that he received samples from both Fitzgerald and Gelis.

Smith said DNA characteristics from the brush hook, truck, cargo and jeans were consistent with Fitzgerald's DNA.

Neither Francis nor Smith were cross examined by the defense.

Alex Gelis testifies for prosecution, Roger Gelis takes the stand

The man accused of murdering his live-in companion and business partner last year heard his son testify against him in court on Thursday.

Roger Gelis sat passively while his son, Alexander, testified somewhat reluctantly for the prosecution.

Alexander Gelis had been charged as an accessory after the fact last year; however, Prosecuting Attorney Walt Welford dismissed those charges without prejudice, meaning the charges could be brought again, in exchange for the younger Gelis' testimony.

Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe appointed public defender Steve Sinkhorn to represent Alexander Gelis during the proceeding.

Outside the jury's presence Sinkhorn told the court Alexander Gelis, of Atlanta, Georgia, would testify in exchange for transactional immunity and would only [illegible] Alexander Gelis would have to [illegible] participation in the murder and that he did not recall some of the details of his 1999 statement to police to the passage of time.

On the witness stand, Alex Gelis said that statement may have been a lie he used "just to get out of there." Further, Alex Gelis said he used drugs on a regular basis, a habit on which he blamed his inability to recall details of the time surrounding Fitzgerald's death.

"I have a bad memory," Alex Gelis told Welford.

"Particularly when it comes to testifying against your father?" Welford questioned.

"No I do a lot of drugs, maybe that's it," Alex Gelis responded.

"Maybe," Welford said emphasizing the latter syllable.

Alex Gelis testified that he used marijuana daily and prescription drugs, as well. Under cross examination, he admitted that he had no illness or injury for which he used such drugs.

Also under cross examination, Alex Gelis said that he was under the influence of drugs the day he gave a statement to police and had been using drugs ever since.

"I have problems recalling the events of the last year," he

Gelis statement played for jury, forensic experts testify

Roger Gelis spoke to the jury Wednesday in the form of an audio-tape the prosecution played in the case against Gelis wound down in Greenbrier County Circuit Court.

The tape revealed that Gelis reacted emotionally, first in anger and later weeping, when Pocahontas County Sheriff Jerry Dale informed him his live-in companion and business partner had been found dead, placing blame on neighbors for her murder.

Gelis said his son, Rudy, was purifying the water and had placed the boards there to discourage tampering.

The defendant apparently believed his son was being blamed for Fitzgerald's death, telling Dale and Lieutenant Ron Simmons that "Rudy's a good boy. He ain't done nothing wrong."

Gelis said his son instructed him to make sure no one "got around the well." Gelis said he wrote a note and put a brick on it and told everybody to stay away from it.

He said he signed Rudy's name to the note because the people who frequented the A-frame knew Rudy was educated.

Investigators found a note in plastic that warned of chemical testing and instructions to leave the tires in the well in place.

Cause of death

Medical examiner Dr. James Frost testified that he performed the autopsy on Fitzgerald's body. Frost said because her body had been in water, it had not decomposed as it would have had it been on the surface or been buried.

Frost, who operates in the Morgantown medical examiner's office, said Fitzgerald died from traumatic injuries to the skull and the brain. Those injuries could have been blunt force trauma, but also could have been a gunshot wound, portion of Fitzgerald's head had been separated from the top of the left ear across the cheek, below the nose, across the right cheek and above the right ear. The back of the skull had irregular cuts, Frost testified. The decapitation could not have taken place in one blow, he testified. He said the implement used to behead Fitzgerald was something heavy with a cutting edge that was fairly sharp.

Although Frost testified that he found no metallic residue in the brain and no gunpowder stippling, he did not rule out a gunshot wound as the cause of death because the body had been in water and the brain in the portion of skull found buried at Stony Bottom had decomposed. Frost testified that in reassembling the skull, he found an area of slight defect where portions of the skull were missing. Frost said he could find no exit wound.

"I have high suspicion there may have been a gunshot wound, but I don't have an intact skull area," he said.

In addition to the head traumas, Fitzgerald also suffered multiple stab wounds and cuts throughout her throat and torso. Frost said he could not determine when those wounds occurred in relation to Fitzgerald's death.

The medical examiner said he could find no evidence of drugs, either prescription or recreational. Although he could not determine a specific time of death, Frost testified Fitzgerald had been dead several days when she was found.

Frost collaborated with Julie Mathers Saul, director of a forensic anthropology lab in Toledo, Ohio, who pieced together Fitzgerald's skull in an attempt to determine the cause of death.

"One of the main things I do is to identify otherwise unidentifiable remains," she testified.

Saul said Frost had contacted her in early February and sent her fragments of the skull, some of which was missing. The edges of the fractures were consistent with "perimortem trauma," or trauma that occurred close the time of death, but she could not say if the trauma occurred before or after death.

Saul said Fitzgerald had sustained a "tremendous amount of fracturing," making it difficult to tell whether she died from blunt force or a gunshot wound. Some of the fracturing could have been produced by [illegible] said.

"I found what is possibly part of an entrance wound, part of a circle, but I can't say for sure," she testified.

The defense did not cross examine Saul.

Water tested for acid

Wayne Morganroth, who is employed by the Bureau of Public Health in the environmental chemistry lab, testified that he had been asked to test a sample of water from the spring house where Fitzgerald's body was recovered.

Wayne Morganroth, who is employed by the Bureau of Public Health in the environmental chemistry lab, testified that he had been asked to test a sample of water from the spring house where Fitzgerald's body was recovered.

Morganroth said that although the request was for a test of muriatic acid, he was unable to test for that specific chemical; however, he testified that the ions in the water were consistent with a high concentration of muriatic acid.

"Only the constituents that make up muriatic acid (hydrogen ions and chloride ions) are present in the sample," he said. "The presence of both indicate that muriatic acid is most likely present."

Sharon Ross, who works at Quality Farm and Fleet in Elkins, testified on the previous day that Gelis had purchased 15 gallons of muriatic acid from her, telling her that he wanted to dissolve a deer that had fallen into his well.

Morganroth said the water was more acetic than normal well water, which generally has a pH level from 6.5 to 8.5. After recalibrating the scale he uses, he said he found the water to have a pH level of 1.95, comparable to stomach acid. Hydrogen ions and chloride ions were present at 100,000 times their normal levels, he said.

"The only acid consistent with the findings is muriatic acid," Morganroth said.

Under cross examination by defense attorney R. David Arrington, Morganroth said he received only one sample of water from the well and no other for comparison.

DNA tests match victim

Trooper Darren Francis, who works in the West Virginia State Police forensic lab in South Charleston, testified that he had identified blood samples on a 1980 Ford F150 pickup truck owned by Fitzgerald, a brush hook, blue jeans and several other items, including a bag of hair samples.

Francis said he transferred the blood samples to another trooper for DNA testing.

That trooper, Ted Smith, who is stationed at the Criminal Investigation Bureau Lab in South Charleston, said he determined that Neither Francis nor Smith were cross examined by the defense.

Alex Gelis testifies for prosecution, Roger Gelis takes the stand

The man accused of murdering his live-in companion and business partner last year heard his son testify against him in court on Thursday.

Roger Gelis sat passively while his son, Alexander, testified somewhat reluctantly for the prosecution.

Alexander Gelis had been charged as an accessory after the fact last year; however, Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford dismissed those charges without prejudice, meaning the charges could be brought again, in exchange for the younger Gelis' testimony.

Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe appointed public defender Steven Sinkiewcz to represent Alexander Gelis during the proceeding.

charges without prejudice, meaning the charges could be brought again, in exchange for the younger Gelis' testimony.

Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe appointed public defender Steven Sinkiewcz to represent Alexander Gelis during the proceeding.

Outside the jury's presence Sinkiewcz told the court Alexander Gelis, of Atlanta, Georgia, would testify in exchange for transactional immunity and would only testify about moving the vehicle at his father's request and helping his father move a roll of carpet.

Sinkiewcz also said that Alexander Gelis would deny any participation in the murder and that he did not recall some of the details of his 1999 statement to police due to the passage of time.

On the witness stand, Alex Gelis said that statement may have been a lie he used "just to get out of there." Further, Alex Gelis said he used drugs on a regular basis, a habit on which he blamed his inability to recall details of the time surrounding Fitzgerald's death.

"I have a bad memory," Alex Gelis told Weiford.

"Particularly when it comes to testifying against your father?" Weiford questioned.

"No I do a lot of drugs, maybe that's it," Alex Gelis responded.

"Maybe," Weiford said emphasizing the latter syllable

"No I do a lot of drugs, maybe that's it," Alex Gelis responded.

"Maybe," Weiford said emphasizing the latter syllable.

Alex Gelis testified that he used marijuana daily and prescription drugs, as well. Under cross examination, he admitted that he had no illness or injury for which he used such drugs.

Also under cross examination, Alex Gelis said that he was under the influence of drugs the day he gave a statement to police and had been using drugs ever since.

"I have problems recalling the events of the last year," he testified, admitting that his drug use might have increased in that time period.

"I would like to forget (what happened to Fitzgerald)," Alex Gelis said under redirect examination.

"I'm sure you would," Weiford said.

However, Alex Gelis did testify that he remembered his father coming to the house where he was staying and instructing him to move Fitzgerald's car to a location somewhere north of Elkins.

Her 1986 Oldsmobile was found in the Clarksburg-Bridgeport area a few days after her body was discovered.

Alex Gelis said his father told him that he had gotten word Fitzgerald would pick up her car at that location; however, in his statement, Alex Gelis told police his father had not revealed a reason for taking her car there, telling his son only he "didn't need to know."

He testified that later that same evening he was at the home of his friend, Alicia Tallman, when he spoke with his father on the telephone. He returned to Fitzgerald's car with Roger Gelis, he said, and the pair moved the car to another location.

The younger Gelis said he did recall helping his father load a roll of carpet into his pickup truck at Stony Bottom the next day after his sister, Kim, went to school.

He testified that the roll of carpet was "fairly heavy," but would not estimate a weight.

"I had no indication there was [illegible] in the carpet," he said.

confrontations with him and Galford.

"You were upset about that," Weiford said. "She was interfering in your affair?"

"I think she was having one, too," Gelis stated.

The defendant went on to say that Fitzgerald was upset, but wouldn't say the couple had "argued strenuously."

"I was angry at her for her treatment of KimShea," Gelis testified.

Gelis further testified that witnesses against him were lying, particularly the witnesses who said they saw the couple argue.

"We didn't argue," he said.

'I knew he beat her'

The defense also called Barbara Tallman, one of the women who discovered Fitzgerald's body.

Tallman, of Green Bank, testified that she had worked for Fitzgerald at The Intersection.

"The last night I saw her was Tuesday at the Intersection about 6:30," she testified. "She was in a good mood. She was leaving to take food home to feed Roger and his kids."

Tallman said Gelis called her the next morning to open the restaurant.

"Were you concerned?" Weiford asked during cross examination.

"Yes," Tallman responded. "I knew he beat her."

She said Gelis called her on Wednesday. By Saturday, she said, she and another friend [illegible]

He testified that the roll of carpet was "fairly heavy," but would not estimate a weight.

"I had no indication there was anything in the carpet," he said.

In his statement to police last year, Alex Gelis said he thought there was a body in the carpet and "I thought if it was a body, it must be Melba."

Alex Gelis testified that investigator Bob Alkire "helped" him out when he was unclear on that point.

He said he didn't ask to leave, but didn't feel he would have been granted an exit had he asked.

"You didn't come here today because you wanted to be a good citizen, did you?" Weiford asked.

"Not in any way," Alex Gelis responded.

Alex Gelis had to appear in court in Fulton County, Georgia, and be ordered to come to West Virginia.

Weiford rested the State's case against Roger Gelis after Alex Gelis testified.

Jolliffe denied a defense motion for a directed verdict of acquittal, noting that the State clearly had sufficient evidence to go to the jury and that the scientific evidence gave further support to the information.

The judge held a Neumann hearing to determine whether or not Gelis would take the stand to testify on his own behalf. According to the law, Gelis had to be instructed that he could take the stand, but he was not obligated to do so.

Gelis told Jolliffe he would testify.

Tallman said Gelis called her the next morning to open the restaurant.

"Were you concerned?" Weiford asked during cross examination.

"Yes," Tallman responded. "I knew he beat her."

She said Gelis called her on Wednesday. By Saturday, she said, she and another friend were concerned about Fitzgerald.

Tallman said under direct examination by Simmons that she and a friend consulted a "psychic board— a little board if you believe in it you can ask it questions," and asked it to help them find Fitzgerald's body.

The board told them her body was at the A-frame and that they should "take water."

Later, when the pair consulted the psychic board, Tallman said, it "named off names."

Weiford objected, noting "this is the most bizarre thing I've ever seen."

Under cross examination, the prosecutor inquired about Tallman's daughter, Alicia.

Alicia Tallman is a friend of Alex Gelis, her mother noted.

Defense attorney Eugene Simmons asked Gelis about the murder.

"Did you kill Melba Fitzgerald?" Simmons inquired.

"Absolutely not," Gelis said. "I loved Melba. We were business partners. We lived together."

Gelis testified his son's statement was a product of State Police coercion.

He also said his son had a drug problem, but would not say it was serious.

"In his mind he probably thought he was doing the right thing for you people," Gelis said under cross examination.

"Did you gain anything financially from Melba's death?" the attorney asked.

"I lost everything, including her," Gelis said. "I went to jail and people picked everything at the house apart, stole the vehicles. The bank repossessed the house and business because it was attached."

Under cross examination, Weiford attacked Gelis' proclamation of love for Fitzgerald.

"You loved her?" Weiford asked.

"Right," Gelis answered.

"In spite of this you turned to an affair with her 17-year-old niece?" the prosecutor pressed.

"Yes," Gelis said.

Weiford continued to push Gelis, asking him about Fitzgerald's

"Did Alicia tell you where Melba was?" Weiford asked.

"No," the witness answered. Barbara Tallman said no one had believed she had used the psychic board so they "let it go."

"I don't really play with that thing anymore," she said.

Marlinton private investigator Charles Camper testified for the defense.

Camper identified items he found in the A-frame including a photograph of a woman with an axe in her head, red candles in black holders, a photograph of Satan's head, figures of a skull and a ghost's head with a black cloak and a chunk of drywall with a poem written on it.

Attorneys give closing arguments

Attorneys for both sides gave closing arguments Friday, taking less than an hour.

"There is only one conclusion," Weiford told the jury. "One result. One verdict—murder in the first degree. And when you consider the issue of mercy, think if you will of any mercy shown Melba Fitzgerald."

Simmons told the jury that although the State had a considerable amount of evidence, none of it connected Gelis to the crime. "The day they found the body, within the hour, they ran and grabbed Roger Gelis and they rode him all the way," Simmons said.

Snowshoe Resort expresses support for Slaty Fork school project

At a special meeting of the Board of Education on August 17, Snowshoe Mountain expressed its support for the proposed school in the Slaty Fork area. Bruce Pitset, Vice-president and General Manager for Snowshoe, said the resort is willing to find land for the school.

The meeting was held on Thursday at the Hawthorne Valley golf course club house for a roundtable discussion on several issues concerning the school system. Besides the proposed school, topics discussed were methods of raising the county's scores on the state tests, the county's school facilities plan, high school renovation project, and school funding.

In addition to Board members and various school personnel, the meeting was attended by representatives of the Pocahontas Development Authority, County Commission, Snowshoe Mountain, and National Radio Astronomy Observatory. Also at the meeting were Delegates Joe Martin and Bill Proudfoot.

The first topic of the meeting was the county's Comprehensive Educational Facilities Plan. These plans are required to be updated every ten years and the revision of the Pocahontas County plan was done last year. The work was done by a professional consulting group and a local committee with Mike Holstine as chairman. In order to seek funding from the state School Building Authority for school construction and renovation, the projects must be listed on the CEFP.

Associate Superintendent Alice Irvine gave a review of the plan. She said the county's first priority for SBA funds is the renovation of Pocahontas County High School. She noted that, although the facility has been well maintained over the years, it is a 30 year-old facility that needs work beyond routine maintenance.

Ms. Irvine said the PCHS renovation project, estimated to cost $4.5 million, includes roof replacement; heating and cooling system improvements; water filtration; fire alarm, security, and electrical system improvements; sprinkling system installation; and asbestos removal.

The plan also includes renovation work at the other school facilities in the county as well as the proposed school for the Slaty Fork area.

Of major concern to the school system is the county's bottom ranking among the state's 55 counties in the results of the state tests this year and this was the next topic on the agenda. School Superintendent James Phares said the county's scores have been consistently low and that the county must improve its teaching skills for all students, giving students experience with the test format used in the state tests, teach test-taking strategies, improved school climate and more parent involvement, and providing resources and additional training for staff.

The aim should be a "learner centered environment," according to Marlinton Middle Principal Glen Wade.

Several principals made reference to the county Teachers' Academy, which was ongoing at time of the special meeting, as a positive beginning to the upcoming school year.

The longest discussion was on the proposed school in the Slaty Fork area. This idea has been discussed by the Board and residents of the area for several years with the concept being a school for grades K-2. The purpose of the school would be to eliminate the long bus ride to Marlinton for these young students.

If such a school is to be established, the Board has always said local support for construction of the building and operational expenses will be necessary.

In commenting on the county facilities plan, Dr. Phares stressed the importance of the State Board of Education approving the Slaty Fork school as one of the county's projects for the next ten years. Gibbs Kinderman noted that this is the first time the state board has approved something of this sort for many years. The emphasis of the state board and building authority has been towards consolidation of schools in recent years.

Bruce Pitset, Vice-President and General Manager of Snowshoe Mountain, said Snowshoe has a master plan for the resort's growth for the next five to ten years which will be causing increases in the year-round employment on the mountain and bring new families to the area. The resort can provide data that will show this projected growth to help support the new school concept, Mr Pitset said. At this time there are about 600 full-time Snowshoe employees, he said.

He pointed out that problems in obtaining employees could impair the resort's growth and noted that schools are one thing people consider in deciding to take a new job. Mr. Pitset said he was "speaking personally as well as for Snowshoe."

Mr. Pitset noted that Snowshoe owns 11,000 acres and "will help find the 10-11 acres" needed for the school.

Dr. Phares said that if students from Randolph and Webster counties are included in the school planning. He said he knows parents in the Valley Head area want a new school there and might not be happy if students go to a school in Pocahontas County.

Dr. Phares said "we have to start thinking regionally in West Virginia on schools and going to have to start sharing resources," he referring to the resort, he stated that "if we have an industry that is growing, we must do what we can to help."

Mr. Kinderman stressed the importance of having the "plans for the school ready, so when the kids are there" it can be opened. He noted that a "no" today does not necessarily mean a "no" tomorrow.

He also pointed out some of the other services the school could provide for the area, such as a day care center and branch library.

Reta Griffith inquired whether Snowshoe employees from other areas in the county could use the school, transporting their children as they go to and from work. She said, however, she would not want to have a negative impact on Marlinton Elementary School.

Dr. Phares stated that he felt it would make sense to have "open" enrollment at the school.

Del. Proudfoot suggested the proposed school might be a pilot project combining education and economic development.

National Radio Astronomy Observatory Green Bank site director Phillip Jewell shared with the group an architect's drawing for the NRAO's new educational center. Dr. Jewell noted that the Observatory already has an active educational program. Even with the poor educational facilities NRAO has now, he said about 6000 students visit each year and about 800 math and science teachers attend the summer teacher training institutes each year.

With the new center, Dr. Jewell said the goal is to have every student in West Virginia pass through the NRAO before they graduate from high school. This will require about 24,000 students to attend programs at NRAO each year, he said. The new center is expected to be so that early next year with a completion date of late summer or fall 2002.

Dr. Jewell said the NRAO wants to be of help to the county schools. He noted that the Observatory has many of the same problems in recruiting and retaining employees as Snowshoe with schools being a factor in both.

Mr. Kinderman made a brief report on the Pocahontas Woods project, which aims to encourage local production of wood products.

Delegate Martin told the group the Slaty Fork area school proposal will need the strong support from the other counties to be successful. He noted that tourism is becoming one of the important parts of the economy of this part of the state and the school project can be viewed as a way of supporting this industry.

Mr. Martin commented briefly on the possibility of changes in the state school aid formula that would help rural counties. He was not optimistic for major changes and said help will come only in small ways. He did noted, however, that Jerry Mezzatesta, Chairman of the House Education Committee, is from a rural county.

A number of people at the meeting volunteered to be on committees that will work on the Slaty Fork school proposal and the NRAO educational center.

The Board of Education met for a regular meeting on Monday.

The meeting opened with an executive session with a PCHS student and her mother concerning the terms of the student's re-entry to the high school. Approval was given at the last meeting for the student to be re-admitted to school pending Monday's meeting with the Board.

In another matter concerning students expelled from school last year, a parent of one of them asked why have not re-entry hearings been held for all of them, not just three. School Superintendent James Phares said the hearings have been held at the request of parents or the alternative education director's request. It was also noted that some of the students were expelled for "up to one year" and the others "for one year." The parent was told to write a letter requesting a hearing for his child and it will be scheduled.

Dr. Phares reviewed a report on the maintenance work that has been done this summer at the five schools.

There are two major projects at the high school. One is the auditorium and Dr. Phares said the plans for the structure are at the state School Building Authority for approval. He also reported that only the stage area will need to be equipped with sprinklers.

The other project is the renovation/enlargement of the library area. This part of the school has been enlarged by including a former hallway and adjoining classroom to create space for the library, computer lab, and distance learning center. Dr. Phares told the Board that the construction part of the project is complete and casework is now being installed.

Dr. Phares reported that the board office building is being reviewed by an engineering firm to determined its structural integrity. A preliminary report indicates the building is structurally sound, he said. The feasibility of moving the conference room to the lower level of the building is being considered. Dr. Phares said he will bring several options on possible futures for a board office to the next meeting.

In discussing an upcoming W. Va. School Boards conference in Charleston next month, Dr. Phares asked if any Board member will be able to stay beyond the conference and meet with representatives from Randolph and Webster Counties concerning the proposed school in the Slaty Fork area. He noted that the Randolph people may be wanting to discuss having the school placed in their county. At least three members said they will be able to stay for the meeting.

Dr. Phares reported that the county did not receive an Elementary Counseling Demonstration Grant.

The Superintendent also reported that the recently held Teacher's Academy went well and another one is being planned for next year.

The Board gave its approval to the elective classes to be offered in Green Bank, Marlinton Middle, and PCHS.

Making November 9 a half-day faculty senate/half-day parent conference day at all schools was approved.

The comment period for the proposed policies on technology was extended for another 30 days. Dr. Phares reported that the county Technology Committee has now given him its report and has suggested several changes. He said he feels the changes are good but faculty senates and staff need time to review them.

The Board met in the second executive session for a personnel matter prior to taking action on personnel items on the agenda.

In personnel matters approval was given to:

of the school would be to eliminate the long bus ride to Marlinton for these young students.

If such a school is to be established, the Board has always said local support for construction of the building and operational expenses will be necessary.

In commenting on the county facilities plan, Dr. Phares stressed the importance of the State Board of Education approving the Slaty Fork school as one of the county's projects for the next ten years. Gibbs Kinderman noted that this is the first time the state board has approved something of this sort for many years. The emphasis of the state board and building authority has been towards consolidation of schools in recent years.

Bruce Pittet, Vice-President and General Manager of Snowshoe Mountain, said Snowshoe has a master plan for the resort's growth for the next five to ten years which will be causing increases in the year-round employment on the mountain and bring new families to the area. The resort can provide data that will show this projected growth to help support the new school concept, Mr Pittet said. At this time there are about 600 full-time Snowshoe employees, he said.

He pointed out that prohibitions to obtaining [illegible] support the resort's growth and noted that schools are one thing people consider in deciding to take a new job. Mr. Pittet said he was "speaking personally as well as for Snowshoe."

Mr. Pittet noted that Snowshoe owns 11,000 acres and "will help find the 10-11 acres" needed for the school.

Dr. Phares said that if students from Randolph and Webster Counties are involved, the school might include up to grades four or five.

He said he will be meeting in Charleston with the School Building Authority and the superintendents from the other two counties to discuss the project. He noted that "we have to have the students" for the school to come about.

Delegate Proudfoot warned of care center and branch library.

Reta Griffith inquired were Snowshoe employees from the areas in the county could go to school, transporting their children as they go to and from work. He said, however, she would not see to have a negative impact on Marlinton Elementary School.

Dr. Phares stated that he didn't would make sense to have "ups" enrollment at the school.

Del. Proudfoot suggested the proposed school might be a pilot project combining education and economic development.

National Radio Astronomy Observatory Green Bank site director Phillip Jewell shared with the group an architect's drawing for the NRAO's new educational center. Dr. Jewell noted that the Observatory already has an active educational program. Even with the poor educational facilities NRAO has now, he said about 6000 students visit each year and about 800 math and science teachers attend the summer teacher training institutes each year.

With the new center, Dr. Jewell said the goal is to have every student in West Virginia pass through the NRAO before they graduate from high school. This will require about 24,000 students to attend programs at NRAO each year, he said. That [illegible] with a [illegible] summer or fall 2002.

Dr. Jewell said the NRAO wants to be of help to the county schools. He noted that the Observatory has some of the same problems in recruiting and retaining employees as Snowshoe with schools being a factor in both.

from a rural county.

A number of people at the meeting volunteered to be on committees that will work on the Slaty Fork school proposal and the NRAO educational center.

The Board of Education met for a regular meeting on Monday.

The meeting opened with an executive session with a PCHS student and her mother concerning the terms of the student's re-entry to the high school. Approval was given at the last meeting for the student to be re-admitted to school pending Monday's meeting with the Board.

In another matter concerning students expelled from school last year, a parent of one of them asked why have not re-entry hearings been held for all of them, not just three. School Superintendent James Phares said the hearings have been held at the request of parents or the alternative education director's request. It was also noted that some of the students were expelled for "up to one year" and the others "for one year." The parent was told to write a letter requesting a hearing for his child and it will be scheduled.

Dr. Phares reviewed a report on the maintenance work that has board office building is being reviewed by an engineering firm to determined its structural integrity. A preliminary report indicates the building is structurally sound, he said. The feasibility of moving the conference room to the lower level of the building is being considered. Dr. Phares said he will bring several options on possible futures for a board office to the next meeting.

In discussing an upcoming W. Va. School Boards conference in Charleston next month, Dr. Phares asked if any Board member will be able to stay beyond the conference and meet with representatives from Randolph and Webster Counties concerning the proposed school in the Slaty Fork area. He noted that proposed policies on technology was extended for another 30 days. Dr. Phares reported that the county Technology Committee has now given him its report and has suggested several changes. He said he feels the changes are good but faculty senates and staff need time to review them.

The Board met in the second executive session for a personnel matter prior to taking action on personnel items on the agenda.

In personnel matters approval was given to:

Affair motive for Fitzgerald murder, according to prosecutor

Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford began the State's case against Roger Gelis Tuesday in Greenbrier County, presenting witnesses in an endeavor to prove Gelis killed his live-in companion and business partner because he was having an affair with her 18-year-old niece.

Gelis was indicted in December, 1999 for the murder of Melba Hickson Fitzgerald, whose nude, decapitated body was found in a concrete spring box on property Gelis is said to have owned.

The case was moved to Greenbrier County because of public sentiment.

Weiford called seven witnesses, including Gelis' alleged lover, KimShea Galford.

Galford, now 19, testified that she and Gelis began an affair that lasted a few months.

"When did the relationship end?" Weiford asked Galford.

"I guess when he went to jail," Galford responded.

The woman testified that Gelis did not make threatening remarks about Fitzgerald to her. "We didn't talk about her a whole lot," she testified.

However, Gelis did mention to her that his relationship with Fitzgerald was about to end.

"He said he didn't figure it was going to last too long; they were going to split up and go their separate ways," Galford testified.

Galford said when she last saw her aunt, Fitzgerald had confronted her about her relationship with Gelis.

"She was threatening to kill me, threatening to kill Roger and threatening to kill herself," Galford testified.

"That time she was crying," she testified. "The other time she wasn't crying."

That other time resulted in a concussion and stitches for Galford and a charge of battery for Fitzgerald and her daughter, Mandy.

"They drug me out (of a car) and beat me up pretty bad," Galford testified.

While Galford said Gelis did not make threatening remarks about his companion to her, another witness testified that Gelis predicted violence in his relationship with Fitzgerald.

Cynthia Albright, formerly Wright, testified that Fitzgerald had confided in her about her sometimes-violent relationship with Gelis.

"I seen bruises on her where he beat her," Albright testified. "As our friendship grew, she told me more and more."

Albright was employed by Fitzgerald.

The week before Fitzgerald disappeared, Albright saw Gelis at Rt. 66 Pitstop, a bar near Cass.

When she greeted him, she said, Gelis commented, "If she doesn't back off, somebody's gonna get killed or I'm gonna hurt her."

Albright said she asked Gelis not to talk like that. And the next day, she said, she pleaded with Fitzgerald to leave the Gelis.

"She said she loved him and she would fight for him," Albright testified.

That plea for separation was repeated to Gelis by Fitzgerald's daughter the day Fitzgerald was reported missing.

Mandy Fitzgerald testified that she went to the home her mother and Gelis shared in Stony Bottom to determine what her living circumstances would be since her mother had told her Gelis did not want her to move near The Intersection, the pizza and sub shop Melba Fitzgerald and Gelis owned.

Gelis told her to sit on the couch, she testified. "He had talked about Mom being mad and leaving," she testified. "I told him he and Mom needed to get away from each other."

Mandy Fitzgerald's suspicions that her mother was not in Elkins, as Gelis had told her, grew and she returned the next day to Stony Bottom to search the residence, she testified.

She searched the bedroom for her mother's clothes and a suitcase, finding neither, she said, but on cross examination by defense attorney Eugene Simmons, revealed that she did discover a large, dark stain on the bedroom carpet. The stain was nearly four feet in diameter, Mandy Fitzgerald testified.

PCHS - BCHS renew 'Passing the Buck' rivalry

This Friday, August 25, the Bath County and Pocahontas County high schools football teams will renew their rivalry at the PCHS field at 7:30 p.m. The two teams will be in a "battle for the buck" to see which one gets the "Passing the Buck" trophy. The Warriors won the trophy last year by a score of 31-12 in the first game with the trophy up for grabs.

The trophy was the brainchild of Bath Athletic Director Larry Persinger, who says it represents the rugged outdoor nature of our communities.

At the end of Friday's game, the athletic directors of the schools will meet at the 50 yard line for the ceremonial "passing the buck" - in the event that Bath wins. Otherwise, Mr. Persinger will just have to kiss the buck goodby for another year.

The trophy was donated by Bland's Taxidermy, of Dunmore, which provided the 10-point shoulder mount buck. Rolf Brunner, of Mountain Memories in Hot Springs, crafted the trophy. Also assisting was Allegheny Mountain Radio, which has stations at PCHS (WVMR) and BCHS (WCHG).

Steve Bland's good friend, the late Jim Wiley, assisted in mounting the buck. Mr. Wiley was assistant football coach at PCHS until his death from heart disease last month.

The PCHS team has dedicated the season this year in memory of Jim Wiley

This is the true story of James Sharp, son of William Sharp, the pioneer, who opened the first permanent residence in the Huntersville vicinity about 1773. James Sharp was the grandfather of the late James Jordan and Mrs. Nancy Hultz, of Hillsboro.

James Sharp was a member of the court of the old arrangement; was high sheriff of the county, a conscientious member of the Presbyterian Church, and was held in high esteem for his patriotism and strict, scrupulous integrity. The members of the court had much confidence in his judgment and he had great influence in forming decisions.

He was much in the habit of hunting at the proper season, not only for the sport, but as a matter of business, for the proceeds were useful in bartering for family supplies for the comfort and sustenance of his household. While living at his first home on Cummings Creek he had a very sensational adventure on Buckley Mountain. He was passing leisurely along when a panther suddenly mounted a log but a few yards in front of him. He shot the animal, but when the smoke cleared away another stood in the same place on the log. This performance was repeated nine times, when the hunter became panic stricken and flanked out for home. Some time during the night the remainder of the pack followed his trail to his house and killed a yearling calf. Properly reinforced Mr. Sharp went back to the spot where he had fired nine times and there beheld what no hunter had seen before or since. Nine panthers, but they were good panthers now; every shot had told with fatal effect. It appears that there were seasons when these animals went in packs of fifteen or twenty, and this happened to be one of the times.

FIELD NOTES

Glenn Moore, on the Jericho Road, recently cleaned up on a pair of chicken stealing gray foxes. Looking for to shoot some thieving crows, he caught sight of a big gray fox which appeared to be interested in the same game. Glenn gave him a dose of shot. He ran off, but the farm dog soon had him stretched out. The chicken thief continued so Mr. Moore arranged nearly a dozen traps around the remains of a late hen. A mother fox got herself caught in three of the traps.

The other foggy morning a spike buck deer was seen in the Jericho Road near the barn of Alva E. Moore.

Albert Curry got the surprise of his life the other day. He was repairing his front porch, and pulled up a broad board. Quick as a flash, out popped the head of a rattlesnake, aiming to strike him. Mr. Curry soon had a dead snake. It was a cloth yard long, slender and lithe.

Commission hears Big Springs area road dispute

Long-time residents vs. newcomers became the theme of the county commission Tuesday as two property owners in the Big Springs area clashed over a proposed road name change.

Pauline Galford, owner of Big Springs convenience store and Fassifern Farms, objected to the proposed name change of a road her property borders. Galford said she wanted the road to be Vandevender Road after the property owners who built it.

Russell Holt, an investor who purchased the Vandevender farm in 1990, has asked the commission to call it Headwaters Road.

The farm encompasses the headwaters of the Elk River, Holt said.

Animosity between Galford, who has lived in the area 75 years, and Holt, who moved there a decade ago, was obvious during the nearly hour-long exchange.

Galford and her daughter, Karen Friel, said they wanted to preserve the history of the area and that the road had always been called Vandevender Road.

Holt, whose acreage is named Headwaters Farm, maintained the 800 foot road was never named officially by the Division of Highways.

Holt said he improved the road and the old Huttonsville Turnpike, spending nearly $100,000. He has sold lots for housing along that road.

Galford asserted that Holt didn't farm the acres he bought, to which Holt responded he was letting his farm lie fallow this year. "Is that not my right?" he asked Galford.

Holt said he was not a developer, nor was he a farmer. Animals on the farm are not his, he said.

Commissioner John Simmons said that a DOH representative had contacted the commission Tuesday morning with the information that Vandevender Road is not a good option since a Grant Vandevender Road in northern Pocahontas County may cause confusion.

"Would you consider Gatewood Road?" Galford asked.

Holt replied emphatically in the negative.

"I spent several thousand dollars improving the road. I did the survey work. I paid for the improvements," he said. "Can I not have this one tiny little consideration? I guess that's too much to ask."

Area-resident Tom Lanier said he had discussed the topic with some of the original families. "It's always been called Vandevender Road," Lanier said. "That's what I got from the community."

The commission tabled the issue for the moment. Simmons will poll area residents concerning their preference to the name of the road.

"I have a high respect for the history of the road," said county commission president Joel Callison.

"I also see your side of it. That name probably means something to you," he told Holt.

The commission may also take no action.

Commissioners also divvied up carryover funds, a chore they haven't had in two years.

Non-mandated agencies to receive the approximately $50,000 are:

- Emergency Medical Services, $20,000
- Senior Citizens, $5,000
- Foster grandparent program, $5,000
- Pocahontas County Search and Rescue liability insurance, $800
- Americorps VISTA North Central Community Action, $2,000 contingent upon NCCA hiring a VISTA worker
- Pocahontas County Fire Board, $10,000
- Greenbrier Valley Economic Development Corporation, up to $12,000 for closing costs at Edray.

The commission went into a 10-minute executive session on personnel with process server Larry Taylor and Prosecuting Attorney Walt Weiford.

Weiford told the commission Taylor wanted to respond to a letter of complaint.

Callison said the commission hadn't considered the letter because of its anonymity.

Weiford said Taylor wanted to offer an explanation in closed

Water found to be source of sickness at scout camp

A rashness of illness this summer at the Buckskin Council Boy Scout Camp has been traced to the water system at the camp, according to County Sanitarian Ed Riley. He said a break in a sewer line allowed one of the wells supplying the system to be contaminated.

Sessions at the camp during the summer are week-long, with scouts arriving on Sunday and leaving Friday or Saturday. The camping season began June 11 this year.

During the second week of camps, a number of scouts and their leaders became ill. The symptoms included stomach cramps, vomiting, and some had diarrhea. The illness lasted about 24 hours for most of those who got ill.

During the third week of camp, June 25 - July 1, almost half of the 300-350 campers became ill, Mr. Riley said. One of the scoutmasters notified the Health Department about this situation during that week, he said.

Mr. Riley reported that samples were taken of the drinking water, lake water, and food in an effort to determine the source of the sickness. No problem was found with any of these potential sources, he said. The tests on the drinking water found no bacteria and that the chlorination of the water was doing the job it is supposed to be doing.

The treated water at the camp is tested on a regular basis, Mr. Riley noted.

Scouts and leaders were interviewed to try to find a common thread that would lead to the cause of the illness. The sicknesses would occur about mid-way into each week.

The same situation occurred during the fourth week of camp, with again about half of the scouts and leaders becoming ill. As one troop of scouts used only bottled water this week and none became sick, the camp's drinking water supply became the center of attention as the possible cause.

The water supply for the camp comes from three wells. Two were drilled in the 1960s when the camp opened and the third in the 1980s. The water is pumped to a single storage tank for distribution around the camp.

Testing of raw water, before chlorination, found that water from the two older wells was contaminated. The source of the contamination for one well was found when dye flushed into a toilet showed up in its well head.

Mr. Riley said the main sewage line to the treatment lagoon passes over the pipe carrying water from this well. The pipe must have a leak and sewage leaking from the sewage obviously found the water pipe and followed it back to the well, he said. There has been no surface indication of a leak in the sewage line, Mr. Riley stated.

The source of contamination for the other well is not known, he said. However, this well is not far from the sewage lagoon, which is a possible source of contamination.

The third well tested clear of any problems, Mr. Riley said.

Mr. Riley said samples of both stools and vomit from sick campers have been sent to the Center for Disease Control for testing but the results are not back yet.

He said that a virus is suspected of being the cause of the sickness. The source of the virus is only speculation, he noted, but it is possible a camper with the virus in his body attended an early camp and it got into the water system due to the leak in the sewer line.

The normal chlorination of a water supply does not kill a virus, Mr. Riley said. The level of treatment needed to take care of a virus would make the water undrinkable, he said. Also, testing of water for viruses is not part of the regular testing procedures due to difficulty and expense.

During the summer only three people were taken to the hospital, Mr. Riley said, and only one required any treatment. The amount of illness deceased during the fifth camping session, but most of a small group at the camp the last week of July became ill.

Mr. Riley said the two contaminated wells have been disconnected from the water system, the storage tank pumped clear of any sediment,

Alleged affair may be evidence in murder trial, judge rules

A circuit judge ruled Tuesday that the State may introduce evidence concerning an alleged affair between an accused murderer and the murder victim's niece.

Chief Judge Frank Jolliffe made the ruling after KimShea Galford, 19, testified that she and Roger Gelis were having an affair last year before her aunt, Melba Hickson Fitzgerald, was found dead.

Fitzgerald's nude, decapitated body was found September 11, 1999, in a hand dug well on property in which Gelis claimed to have an interest. She was 41.

Galford testified that Fitzgerald had confronted her about her relationship with Gelis shortly before the older woman disappeared approximately three days before her body was discovered by coworkers.

"She said she didn't expect it from me because I was her niece," Galford testified. Galford said she felt threatened because Fitzgerald was carrying a large stick which she held behind her.

"She was upset, she said she knew about the affair and knew where we went," Galford said.

Galford said she believed the affair had caused turmoil between Gelis and Fitzgerald. "I'm sure it caused problems," she testified.

She also testified that Gelis had told her he and Fitzgerald were "going to split up."

They didn't get along too well," Galford said.

Fitzgerald, Galford testified, was talking about killing herself, as well as threatening to kill her and Gelis.

The judge ruled Galford's testimony would be relevant and that its probative value outweighed prejudicial value.

Galford may testify at Gelis' August 22 trial "for the limited purpose of proving motive and intent," the judge ruled.

Jolliffe read silently a statement from Cindy Wright, who was otherwise not identified.

And what seems to be a recurring problem in the case cropped up again, as the defense said they had never seen Wright's statement.

"To the best of my knowledge I can truthfully say I haven't seen this before today," defense attorney Eugene Simmons told the court.

Simmons' partner, David Arrington, said he had not seen the statement, either.

Jolliffe questioned Chief Deputy M. Craig Doss about the condition of the files when the defense was allowed to inspect them earlier this summer.

"Was it in the file when you took over?" Jolliffe asked.

"Yes, sir, it was," Doss answered.

"Was it in the file when you gave it to them?"

"Yes."

One hearing in this case was delayed twice this summer—once because the defense had not received a copy of Gelis' taped statement to police and then because the tape was not audible.

Simmons told Jolliffe the prosecution was having evidence tested that the defense has not yet been allowed to examine.

The judge said that may leave the state in the position of not being able to use the evidence at trial.

Gelis, 57, remains in the Southern Regional Jail without bond.

DOH designates sites for tire disposal

For the next four Saturdays, West Virginia motorists will be able to dispose of old waste tires from automobiles and light trucks by bringing them to 78 Division of Highways locations throughout the state, Transportation Secretary and Commissioner of Highways Sam Beverage announced recently.

Beverage emphasized that the free disposal service would be only for state residents in a West Virginia vehicle with a 50-tire maximum.

"No tires will be accepted from tire dealers, salvage yard dealers or those from out of state, and rims will not be accepted," he said.

In Pocahontas County, tires may be disposed of at Division of Highways sites in Green Bank, Marlinton and Hillsboro.

West Virginia team competes at National Forestry Invitational

A team of four West Virginia teenagers is competed last week at the national 4-H Forestry Invitational at Jackson's Mill State 4-H Conference Center near Weston, placing second.

Team members are Greg Hamons, of Droop Mountain, who placed fourth, Adam Bosley, of Durbin, who placed sixth, Adam Triplett, of Marlinton, who placed ninth, and Jason Goldizen, also of Marlinton. Jamie Kellison, of Marlinton, was alternate. The team is coached by Mike Burns, of Marlinton.

The Forestry team was sponsored locally by Cramer Lumber Company in Marlinton, Varner Construction Company in Durbin and The Timber Company, of Mount Hope.

For these high school students, the opportunity to compete as a member of the team rewards years of hard work in 4-H forestry and other conservation-related projects and club activities. As winners of the West Virginia 4-H forestry contest, these young adults have earned the right to represent the state at this national contest sponsored by the International Paper Company Foundation.

The team is competing against teams form 18 states across the country in events such as tree identification, tree measurement, forest insect and disease identification, forest evaluation and the Forestry Bowl, a fast-paced event fashioned after popular television quiz shows.

4-H is the youth education program of the Cooperative Extension Service of the U. S. Department of Agriculture and the state land grant universities. More than 5 and one-half million youngsters participate in 4-H and nearly 100,000 are part of the 4-H Forestry Program.

The International Paper Company Foundation was founded in 1953 as a philanthropic grant-making organization. While the foundation provides financial support to various civic, cultural and health programs, its primary focus is secondary education in communities where large numbers of International Paper employees live and work.

International Paper is a worldwide producer of printing papers, packaging and forest products. the company also operates specialty businesses and a broadly-based paper distribution network. International Paper, headquartered in Purchase, New York, has manufacturing and converting facilities in 46 states and 50 countries. Sunshine law not violated by BOE, judge rules

A circuit judge denied a plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction Tuesday after determining that the Pocahontas County Board of Education had not violated the spirit of the Open Meetings Act when proceeding on reduction in force matters during several executive sessions held earlier this year.

Judge James Rowe said his obligation was to "focus on the character of the meetings."

"It does not appear to me the spirit of the act was violated," Rowe said.

Nine board of education employees—Carol Alderman, Gary Beverage, Linda Beverage, Cynthia Morrison, Justin Salvati, Kelley Salvati, Melissa Shank, Richard Thompson and Leda Gray Williams—petitioned the court to stop the board from its plans to reduce employees.

Gary Beverage, Linda Beverage and Thompson were cut to half-time. Justin Salvati, Kelley Salvati, Shank and Williams lost their jobs. Alderman was put on the transfer list.

Morrison was subsequently hired to teach at Marlinton Middle School.

Their attorney, Bill Turner, of Lewisburg, argued Tuesday that the section of the Open Meetings Act, commonly referred to as the Sunshine Law, dealing with personnel "clearly denotes an individual employee."

Turner said discussing programs was not an exception to the Open Meetings Act under the law.

"Clearly those kinds of resource decisions are to be held in open session," the attorney argued.

The board's attorney, Greg Bailey, asked the judge to look at the whole statute. "They discussed specific individuals, individual programs," Bailey said.

Bailey also argued the plaintiffs could seek relief at the Education and State Employees' Grievance Board, to which Turner maintained that board did not have jurisdiction in Sunshine Law violations.

Bailey said the problems the board would encounter if the reduction in force were overturned would include a "monetary aspect in the range of $500,000."

Turner disputed that figure and claimed the board of education "failed to follow the correct process."

"For them to say we're the bad guys because we're enforcing the law is just a matter of playing the blame game," Turner told the judge. "It's not helpful to point fingers and lay blame."

The employees' next step is to appear before the grievance board.

PCHS Jazz Band and Choir perform at Opera House

It began to feel a lot like Christmas last Tuesday when the Pocahontas County High School Jazz Band and Choir performed holiday music at the Opera House in Marlinton.

Under the direction of Ron Hall, the jazz band performed updated versions of "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful," "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen," "Up on the Housetop," "Santa Claus is Coming to Town," "Winter Wonderland," "Big Band Christmas," Travis Juergens, Robert Alonso, Jesse Burns, Patrick Brandt, Laurinda Armstrong, Jaclyn Hollandsworth, Allison Norrod, Janet Biggs and Rebecca Stull.

The choir sang several selections including "Oh, Holy Night," with solo by Patrick Lambert, "Jingle Bells," and "Old-fashioned Christmas."

Although the Opera House provided a chilly venue for the performers, the audience thouroughly enjoyed the music of these gifted musicians.

Rock Fishin' a boyhood story

By C. A. Curry

It was an ideal place for young boys to grow up. Located high in the mountains of West Virginia, the Town of Marlinton in the 1940's had a population of about 1200 people. There were no televisions, computers, or computer games, but we always had plenty of things to do.

The winters were often severe but this slowed us only slightly. There were sledding, snowball fights, and skating on the streams and ponds. For us kids, the winter snows brought lots of fun activities. On those unbearable days, there was Monopoly and matchstick poker.

Warmer weather and school vacation time turned our attention to a variety of outdoor games and swimming in the local swimming holes. Biking and hiking in the nearby woods were almost daily activities. Our most favorite activity, however, was rock fishin'. This required very little planning and minimal equipment.

Our prey in rock fishin' was the Rockbass or what we knew as the "goggle-eye" or sometimes as the "red-eye." They were abundant in the rocky, slower moving streams of the area. They were a tasty pan fish but received very little attention from most fishermen. The West Virginia fishing regulations don't even mention them and they are grouped with other fish in the "All Others" category.

All that it took for us was for someone to say "Let's go rock fishin' tomorrow." Three or four of us would agree to meet early the next morning to begin our outing.

We had an ideal place to fish. Knapps Creek, a clear, rocky stream flowed along the southeast edge of the town, made a large horseshoe loop of about a mile or so, and then flowed northwest ending a few hundred yards from the start of the horseshoe. This allowed us a short walk to our starting point and two or three hours of fishing before we moved back near our homes.

Knapps Creek was a typical mountain stream. It was shallow with many riffles and pools. The bottom was rocky with a few areas of sand and gravel. Its water was taken through a 36" pipe underground to the town water plant. Just below the in-take was an area of shallow water and an excellent place to catch craw-dads. Catching craw-dads was not easy but this was part of our fun. Craw-dads grow to five or six inches in length but we used those only two inches or less.

To catch craw-dads, we would lift rocks along the edge of the creek. Sometimes they would remain still, raising their pinchers in defense, and allow you to quickly grab them. More likely, however, they would swim away in reverse to seek another hiding place. If you are lucky, you might grab them while they are swimming. Most of the time, you follow them and attempt to catch them as they enter their next hiding place. The smarter craws swam toward the swifter, deeper water and were lost. When our can was about half full, we were ready to begin fishing!

The technique for catching goggle-eyes was quite simple. They spend most of their daylight hours beneath rocks. All you have to do is convince your bait to crawl under the rock where it can be eaten. Well, maybe it is not so simple!

We would wade into the stream, stand on the rock, and fish under it. You must find an opening beneath the rock, usually on the upstream side, and drop the craw-dad so that it would be carried into the opening by the current. It often took several attempts to judge the current and have the bait arrive at the right spot. The idea was to have the bait crawl beneath the rock but the craw usually had other ideas! You could tell when a fish was under the rock when the craw raised its pinchers in defense and took off in the opposite direction. You would lift it up and again return it to the opening. After several returns, it would eventually go in the right direction.

If the fish was really hungry, it would come out to grab the bait and return to its lair. On the other hand, you could not afford to allow the craw-dad to venture too far and out from rocks clean away the thin silt present on the rocks. This "slick" appearance is a sure sign of fish traffic. The other is to observe the area on the downstream side of the rock. Fish "waste" from beneath the rock washes out and collects on the downstream gravel. If neither sign is present, you are wasting your time.

Once you have hooked a goggle-eye, then comes the problem of "landing" it. The goggle-eye has 10 or 12 long spines in its dorsal fin. Simply grabbing it will result in being "finned." The sharp spines cause a painful puncture which quickly becomes sore and lasts several days. One method of landing it was to swing the fish between your thighs, trap it with your legs, and stick your finger in its mouth. You could then carry it to the bank. Some preferred to simply hold the fish aloft on the line and carry it to the bank. This method risked the loss of the fish before reaching the shore. Regardless of the method used, we all usually ended with finned hands.

The first fish caught required us to look for a "stringer." This was always a forked stick broken from a streamside alder. We would find a pencil sized stick with a similar size branch. The twigs would be stripped from it and a three-inch portion of the branch left attached. The small end is inserted through the gills and the fish allowed to slide down until it was stopped by the stub of the branch. The person catching the first fish was elected to carry the day's catch.

There were a number of hazards associated with rock fishin'. They ranged from irritating to dangerous. We were all fully aware of them and took steps to minimize these hazards.

The first hazard we encountered were the "periwinkles." These are very small snails which covered the submerged rocks throughout the length of the stream. They have very fragile shells which are easily crushed by our bare feet. They were also cause problems. One of the worst for me were the "nettles." Nettles grow to about three feet high and have stinging hairs along their stems. Walking bare legged through nettles results in itchy stings on the legs and can be quite painful for short periods of time. We tried to avoid nettles which were common along Knapps Creek. Poison ivy was also common and avoided.

Water snakes were abundant and we were often startled by their sudden appearance. We knew they were harmless and usually just ignored them. A more serious threat were the rattlesnakes and copperheads, which were common in the hills along the stream. During the drier summer months, they sometimes migrated to the streams. To avoid them, we stayed in the water as much as possible. If we encountered one, we gave it plenty of room and hastily left that area. No one was ever bitten by one of these poisonous snakes.

One of our most dreaded hazards was neither poisonous nor dangerous. It was the "waterdog" or mudpuppy. They are large, ugly salamanders which spend their daylight hours beneath rocks in the stream. They also loved craw-dads! This sometimes resulted in an unwanted catch.

Waterdogs grow to two feet in length, have a hugh, rubbery mouth, and small beady eyes. It was easy to recognize a waterdog hook-up. When you set the hook, they would pull back with a steady firm pull. Only by exerting a constant, steady pressure could the catch be extracted from beneath the rock.

Once the waterdog was extracted, the catcher would wade to the bank where we would all gather. When we were armed with rocks the catcher would drop the waterdog to the ground and we would pelt it with the rocks until it was dead. We were familiar with an old saying which claimed no fish would bite on a hook once bitten by a waterdog. This gave us a good excuse to cut the line and abandon the hook.

With some experience, we could tell from the feel of the line in our hands and its movement the approximate size of the fish. A herky-jerky feel with the line darting about under the rock was the sign of a small fish. A firm steady pull was a good indication of a large fish. Sometimes with a larger fish, you could even hear an audible "chomp" as the fish took in the crawfish. This always caused my heart to beat a little faster!

Each of us had our own system for determining when to set the hook on a fish. We knew the smaller herky-jerky fish required more time to injest the bait. We could set the hook on the larger fish much more quickly. I preferred the "count" method. A large fish might require a count of 5 to 10 while smaller fish needed a count of at least 15. Sometimes the count would start slowly and then accelerate as the excitement rose and I became impatient.

Most of the larger pools or "holes" on Knapps Creek have a name. The Ellick or Alex Hole near Minnehaha Springs is the deepest and perhaps most dangerous. A large rock on the far side of the stream with a ladder allows swimmers to jump or dive into the deep, cold water. Its depth is unknown but appears to be 20 feet or so.

Downstream near Hunterville is the Devil's Backbone Hole named for a geological structure where the earth's crust is exposed as a high, rocky arch. It is a favorite fishing spot but not suitable for swimming.

Nearer to Marlinton is the Indian Hole, named for a resident American Indian ancestry. It is a long, quiet pool with waist deep water and easy access from Route #39. Just below it is the Pine Tree Hole where a mill once made wooden "pins" on which glass insulators were placed for installation on telephone lines. It is also a shallow pool but difficult to wade and lies mostly on private property.

The Curry Hole is next to where I spent many happy hours as a child when visiting my uncle Albert and his family. It is small but ideal for beginning swimmers. Fishing was also quite good. The Jack Hole was downstream where Knapps Creek entered the Town of Marlinton. It is a beautiful hole with huge rocks and deep pockets of water. It also contained some large fish but were difficult to reach and fish. The Curry and Jack holes lie on private property. This takes us to the Intake where our fishing adventures always began.

Along the horseshoe bend had names but we also had names for our fishing rocks! There was the "peanut rock" comprised of small, round pebbles and resembling peanuts glued together. The "chocolate rock" was a large rectangular rock with a smooth surface which looked like a candy bar. My personal

Our equipment began with a stick, usually broken from a tree limb, pencil-sized and about the width of your hand. Onto this stick would be tied four to six feet of fishing line. The line would be wrapped around the stick and held loosely in one hand with one end of the line protruding between the fingers. The line could then be pulled or snapped from the stick as if from a reel. Hooks were bought in bulk and carried often in a metal aspirin box which caused a clink-clank sound as we walked. A dime's worth of hooks would last several outings.

A clean, empty can was next. This was for our bait. A number 2 1/2 was best but we would use whatever was available. Our clothing was usually cut-off jeans, no shoes, and shirts were optional.

Our first task when arriving at the creek was to catch our bait. The favorite bait was crawfish or "craw-dads" as we knew them. We began at the "In-take," where water [illegible] a good place. If you are lucky, you might grab them while they are swimming. Most of the time, you follow them and attempt to catch them as they enter their next hiding place. The smarter craws swam toward the swifter, deeper water and were lost. When our can was about half full, we were ready to begin fishing!

The technique for catching goggle-eyes was quite simple. They spend most of their daylight hours beneath rocks. All you have to do is convince your bait to crawl under the rock where it can be eaten. Well, maybe it is not so simple!

We would wade into the stream, stand on the rock, and fish under it. You must find an opening beneath the rock, usually on the upstream side, and drop the craw-dad so that it would be carried into the opening by the current. It often took several attempts to judge the current and have the bait arrive at the right spot. The idea was to have the bait crawl beneath the rock but the craw usually had other ideas! You could tell when a fish was under the rock when the craw raised its pinchers in defense and took off in the opposite direction. You would lift it up and again return it to the opening. After several returns, it would eventually go in the right direction.

If the fish was really hungry, it would come out to grab the bait and return to its lair. On the other hand, you could not afford to allow the craw-dad to venture too far beneath the rock. This would result in a sure-fire hang-up and a lost hook.

An observant fisherman can recognize certain signs to indicate that a fish does live beneath a particular rock. The first is at the opening beneath the rock. Fish going under [illegible] will often bring "fins-ed." The sharp spines cause a painful puncture which quickly becomes sore and lasts several days. One method of landing it was to swing the fish between your thighs, trap it with your legs, and stick your fingers in its mouth. You could then carry it to the bank. Some preferred to simply hold the fish aloft on the line and carry it to the bank. This method risked the loss of the fish before reaching the shore. Regardless of the method used, we all usually ended with finned hands.

The first fish caught required us to look for a "stringer." This was always a forked stick broken from a streamside alder. We would find a pencil sized stick with a similar size branch. The twigs would be stripped from it and a three-inch portion of the branch left attached. The small end is inserted through the gills and the fish allowed to slide down until it was stopped by the stub of the branch. The person catching the first fish was elected to carry the day's catch.

There were a number of hazards associated with rock fishin'. They ranged from irritating to dangerous. We were all fully aware of them and took steps to minimize these hazards.

The first hazard we encountered were the "periwinkles." These are very small snails which covered the submerged rocks throughout the length of the stream. They have very fragile shells which are easily crushed by our bare feet. They were not a problem unless your foot would slide along the rock. In this case, the circular opening in the shell would cut into the foot. The half-moon shaped cuts were not deep or serious but did cause sore feet for a few days.

Weeds along the banks could [illegible] den appearance. We knew they were harmless and usually just ignored them. A more serious threat were the rattlesnakes and copperheads, which were common in the hills along the stream. During the drier summer months, they sometimes migrated to the streams. To avoid them, we stayed in the water as much as possible. If we encountered one, we gave it plenty of room and hastily left that area. No one was ever bitten by one of these poisonous snakes.

One of our most dreaded hazards was neither poisonous nor dangerous. It was the "waterdog" or mudpuppy. They are large, ugly salamanders which spend their daylight hours beneath rocks in the stream. They also loved craw-dads! This sometimes resulted in an unwanted catch.

Waterdogs grow to two feet in length, have a hugh, rubbery mouth, and small beady eyes. It was easy to recognize a waterdog hook-up. When you set the hook, they would pull back with a steady firm pull. Only by exerting a constant, steady pressure could the catch be extracted from beneath the rock.

Once the waterdog was extracted, the catcher would wade to the bank where we would all gather. [illegible] ing about under the rock was the sign of a small fish. A firm steady pull was a good indication of a large fish. Sometimes with a larger fish, you could even hear an audible "chomp" as the fish took in the crawfish. This always caused my heart to beat a little faster!

Each of us had our own system for determining when to set the hook on a fish. We knew the smaller herky-jerky fish required more time to ingest the bait. We could set the hook on the larger fish much more quickly. I preferred the "count" method. A large fish might require a count of 5 to 10 while smaller fish needed a count of at least 15. Sometimes the count would start slowly and then accelerate as the excitement rose and I became impatient.
